Look what's cooking in the town parking lot

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Strange things are happening in the town parking lot behind Main Street. And it's not just the overflow of cars.

There's a long truck parked in the corner, just behind the gas station near the highway department garage. It's contents do not include a member of the "Witches" cast. But it does carry heavenly aromas, tempting smells that linger as you walk past the truck to view the filming along Main Street.

This is the mobile kitchen of Unique Catering Co. of Burbank, Calif., a proper nomer for this restaurant on wheels.

Inside the narrow truck body, owner Jordy and cook Carla Holland, busily prepare two meals each day for the cast and crew of "Witches." Breakfast and a dinner meal are cooked each day, and if the filming continues into the night, an evening supper is also prepared inside this mini kitchen.

"We start at 3 a.m.," Carla explained this week, taking a brief rest between breakfast cleanup and preparation of dinner. "and breakfast is served from about 6 to 9 in the morning."

The prepared foods are lined outside the truck on long tables, buffet style. The stars, movie extras, and all the crew members are invited to partake of the full course meal.

"We have everything they would like," she explained. "We have cereals, fruits, pastries, all types of eggs to order, breakfast burritos, toast, pancakes, everthing they would want."

Most of time, Holland explained, the stars will stand in line for their breakfast. "But sometimes," she added, "they're really tired and ask a production assistant to get it for them and bring it back to their mobile home."

The stars, she confided, eat very lightly. Cher, Michelle Pfeiffer and Susan Sarandon love the fresh salads. Jack, who is currently on a diet, has his own cook.

"But he loves the breakfast burritos," Holland noted. A California favorite, the breakfast burrito includes sauteed onions, mushrooms and peppers. Cheese is placed into the tortilla and an egg. The vegetables are spread on top of the egg and a touch of taco sauce may be sprinkled over the concoction. The ingredients are wrapped in the tortilla. "It's a really popular carry-and-go breakfast," she explained.

"The three girls," she said, speaking of the film's starring actresses, "are not picky at all. But if you've seen them, you'll notice how thin they are. They don't eat much, and what they eat is very healthy."

The caterers prepare eight to ten different salads each day. According to the Burbank-based chef, Here's what's cookin' in Cohasset. Chefs Bobby Jones, Carla Holland and Jordy peer out from the kitchen-trailer parked behind the Texaco Station.

A new career for Don Robbins

After 25 years in the carpentry business, Don Robbins "is winding down."

A new career is just begining.

The 52 year-old Norwell resident was appointed Cohasset's building inspector in June. That followed a month in which he served as acting inspector following the resignation of Edward Poskus.

Robbins, who has lived in the neighboring town of Norwell for 30 years, long ago began a successful remodeling company. After 25 years of working seven days a week, and putting in a lot more than 40 hours per week, Robbins decided he had enough.

"I really made the decision last winter," he said this week in his town hall office. "It was about ten below and I asked myself if I really needed this. I wondered what I was doing working outside."

When he finally reached the warmth of his home, Robbins questioned himself again. "I asked myself what I was qualified to do, other than remodeling, and this is what I came up with," he laughed. "My wife was really pleased. She was tired of the hours I worked, and was sick of answering my phone calls. She's really pleased I don't work 24 hours a day, seven days a week anymore.

"It was time to say, 'the heck with it.' It was time to do something else," he added. "Sometimes I miss the contact I had with some of my customers, then I remember the hours."

The new inspector is "winding down" his longtime business. He never accepts a Cohasset job, he said, which is prohibited by state law. "The entire business is going to cease shortly," he declared. "I can't do two jobs. So I'm giving up my old one."

Robbins had been a deputy building commissioner in Hingham in 1985. He became familiar with Hingham's zoning bylaws, and he now must become acquainted with a separate group of regulations in Cohasset.

Although inspecting new construction is part of his new responsibilities, Robbins said the major portion involves enforcement of the town's zoning bylaws.

"No one is that familiar with the town's zoning, unless you're a member of the zoning board of appeals. It's a very complicated set of rules," he explained. "I was very familiar with Hingham's, but they are different from Cohasset's. Each set of bylaws are based on a town's particular needs. I expect in a year or so, I will be proficient with Cohasset's laws."

Robbins noted that Cohasset's bylaws include a whole section on signs. Another section of the regulations deal with heights of fences. "Hingham

Hingham hosts hazardous waste talk

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Speakers from the Massachusetts Campaign to Clean Up Hazardous Waste informed nearly two dozen Hingham and Cohasset residents of an impending peril to the Commonwealth's groundwater supplies.

Residents of the two communities are planning a combined Hazardous Waste Collection Day. This information meeting was held in the Hingham home of Barbara and Stefan Valovic.

Rob Sargent and Maria Mobilia also presented a proposal which voters will find on the November ballot.

They explained, if voters pass Question 4, the finding and cleanup of dumpsites across Massachusetts would be accelerated.

"Consciousness concerning the hazardous waste problem has increased across the country," Sargent said. "Five or six years ago, people thought of it more in terms of Love Canal and Times Beach.

"It's only been more recently," he added, "that sites like Woburn, and even closer to here, sites like Holbrook are examples of what can happen if you don't take steps to prevent it from happening."

He explained, while the problem has gotten closer to home, "many still don't realize the sheer magnitude of the problem."

He explained, "It's not just the few sites that you read about in the newspaper; at this point, the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) estimates there are between 1,000 and 1,500 hazardous waste sites just within Massachusetts."

He added, "Five years ago, if you said there were 1,000 hazardous waste sites, people would have laughed at you. Now, this State agency is telling us there's more like 1,500.

"If you do some simple arithmetic," Sargent said, "for 1,000 to 1,500 hazardous waste sites in the state, there are only 351 towns in Massachusetts. Simple arithmetic will tell you there's a likelihood that one of those is within your community."

He added, with the shutdown of a public water well in Marshfield last week, a total of 46 towns have suffered such groundwater contamination.

"The DEQE studies show that about one-third of the state's 750 public water supply wells show at least traces of toxic contamination," he said.

"We're increasingly seeing links between exposure to those chemicals and health problems, wheth-

No more detours

Keep cool!

Tuesday may have been the last day for filming in Cohasset Village. That's probably good news for merchants, police and residents.

After two weeks of detours in and around Main and Elm Streets, traffic will no longer be bottlenecked in the center of town.

Tuesday's filming along the common and on South Main and Elm Streets concluded that evening. As of Wednesday and Thursday, it was back to more remote Cohasset locations along Sandy Beach and elsewhere.

Although "Witches" crew members said Tuesday was the end for the Village, there is always the chance a scene may have to be reshot in the same location.

But until that possibility occurs, welcome back to reality!

Cohasset's week . . .

Jimmy Fund softball game set

Any town official or town employee interested in playing a game of softball against the Town of Scituate is encouraged to volunteer.

The neighboring town has challenged Cohasset to a softball game Sept. 7. All proceeds from the game will go toward the Jimmy Fund. Only town officials and employees may volunteer their athletic abilities.

Paramedic support offered

Fire Chief Daniel Brock explained to selectmen Monday night that a paramedic support company, which will be based in Norwell, has offered to provide paramedic assistance to the Cohasset Fire Department ambulance. The services will be free of charge to the town, he added.

The chief advised selectmen of the offer, although he will further review the offer for possible "hidden future" costs if a contract was signed with the Norwell company.

Chief Brock explained it is an expensive proposition to train an EMT to become an intermediate level emergency medical technician or a paramedic with advanced training. The Scituate Fire Department has one paramedic who costs the department $18,000 for just those services and his required training classes.

He also noted that a few EMT's in the Cohasset department are interested in continuing their EMT training to the intermediate level. Selectman Rocco Laugelle said the men should be encouraged and compensated.

Regarding the paramedic company offer, Chief Brock said he will study the pros and cons. One disadvantage, he noted, is that "we wouldn't know where they are when we need to call them. They estimate their time of arrival at seven minutes, but we won't know exactly where they are all the time."

More liability insurance

Acting on a suggestion from the highway surveyor, selectmen voted this week to include three full-time elected town officials to the town's workmen's compensation insurance policy.

Harold Litchfield alerted Executive Secretary Donald Andrew that because the town treasurer/collector, highway surveyor and clerk are elected, they are not eligible for workmen's compensation. If a person is permanently injured they would have to bring a lawsuit against the town to receive weekly compensation, Andrew told selectmen.

There is enough money in the insurance budget to cover the additions to the policy, Andrew said. Based on that information, selectmen voted to include the three full-time employees to the policy.

Horse riding is okay

According to research completed by town counsel, horseback riding and other equestrian events at Wheelwright Park are allowable uses of the park.

Looking into the three parcels willed to the town by the Wheelwright family, Atty. Richard Henderson explained in a letter to selectmen that two of the three parcels conveyed to the town by the Wheelwright family were conveyed in a trust to use as a public park. The third parcel was conveyed without restriction to its use. "None of the documents prohibits horseback riding or other equestrian events on the property," he stated in the letter.

"It is our opinion that the Board of Selectmen may exercise their discretion and permit the temporary use of a portion of the Park by a private riding club. Such use of the park is not prohibited by the conveyance to the town and does not unduly restrict the public's access or use of the park," he added.

Some good cookin' coming from town parking lot. . .

Cher is quite fond of the tuna.

Preparations for breakfast begin in their long, narrow kitchen at about 3 a.m. The meal is served outside the truck on long buffet tables from 6 to 9 each morning. Cast and crew members mingle outside the truck parked behind the Texaco station in the town parking lot.

Once the meal is completed and everyone is well fed, the tables are cleared and cleaned, the dishes are washed, and preparations begin immediately for the day's main meal.

A typical dinner will include baked manicotti, noodles filled with tomatoes and basil, and fresh baked cod fish with Italian dressing, onions and parmesan cheese.

This meal usually takes place in the hall of the Second Congregational Church next to town hall. The caterers set up a series of tables and chairs. They can accomodate anywhere from 90 to 400 persons.

"It depends, day to day," Carla explained. "One day when there were a lot of extras in the scenes, we fed as much as 400. Other days, there's only the stars and the crew members. Most of the big scenes with the extras are finished, so we're pretty much into a routine."

The truck is driven by Jordy over to the Highland Avenue church. Lunch is quickly served because the crew only has a half-hour for the dinner break. "They have no time for a restaurant, so this is made easy for them," she explained.

Lunch is completed and cleaned away by 2 p.m. The interior of the truck-kitchen is cleaned and the dishes are washed and stacked away. Now it is time to fight the traffic into Boston and do some more food purchasing at Fanueil marketplace. "We're done with our shopping by 6 or 7 p.m. But if the film is running late, we stay with them and prepare another meal. We haven't done that yet. But it's in our contract with Warner Brothers that we feed cast and crew every six hours," Carla said.

Unique Caterers has traveled throughout the United States and Canada, and to the Virgin Islands with various television and movie crews. "We're banking next on going to Europe," she said with anticipation." I'm sure we can do it, we could put the truck on a barge."

The catering service contracts with the production manager of a specific film. The truck will travel wherever the movie is being filmed. "The only place we're not needed is when they are filming at the studios in Burbank. Then they eat at the studio commissary," she noted.

Among the movies serviced by Unique Caterers are: An Officer and a Gentleman, Absence of Malice, Tightrope, Back to the Future, Ice Castles, China Syndrome, and At Close Range. They have long been associated with television producer Aaron Spelling and many of his current and previous series.

Both Carla and Jordy put in 16 to 18-hour days six days a week. "But we're well paid," she said with a smile. "It's a great job for a single person who likes to travel. But it's very hectic. I didn't have a day off for five weeks. Jordy let me have Sunday off and I went sailing with some of the others in Gloucester. It was great!"

A dedicated movie buff ("and I'm really critical") Carla predicted "Witches" will be an artistic and box office hit. "How can it miss? George Miller and Vilmos Zsiegmund are fantasic. And the novelist John Updike is great. This movie is so atmospheric. It will be terrific."

The two chefs prepare lots of vegetables (all steamed) and nothing they serve contains salt. "Californians are very health conscious," Jordy said. "We use fresh herbs and garlic powder and black pepper rather than other seasoning. We prepare lots of fish and chicken."

Director Miller "loves his sweets," according to Carla, who said he desires pancakes for breakfast and cakes in the afternoon.

Among the stars she has served include Paul Newman and Sally Field, who remain among her favorites. Debra Winger was "fun and lively" during the filming of An Officer and a Gentleman in Washington. Richard Gere, a method actor, is more serious, she commented.

"Boston," Carla said, "is a gorgeous city." Cohasset reminds her of her hometown in Colorado with a population of 800. "I've been in most of the shops here. They're great," she said.

Carla said she'll stay in the hectic L.A. catering business for a few more years. Then it's on to something with more regular hours.

"I've got to slow down," she said. "This business can get to you. But it's my favorite thing to do - to nake people happy. That's the challenge of this job. That's why I like it so much."

Historic consideration

Scituate Lighthouse on Cedar Point and Minot Lighthouse off the North Scituate Cohasset coast are being considered for inclusion in the National Registry of Historic Places.

The lighthouses are among 42 lighthouses along the Atlantic coast to be proposed as a group, according to Sally Zimmerman, director of preservation planning at the Massachusetts Historical Commission.

Zimmerman said the proposal was expected to be approved by the Historical commission Sept. 10 and forwarded to Washington, where it must be reviewed by the Department of Transportation which oversees the Coast Guard, which owns Minot Lighthouse.

The final decision will be made by the National Parks Service.

"The National Registry is set up as a planning tool and as the official listing to identify any historic buildings in a project area and ensure that the project respects the historic nature of the building," he said.

The listing only affects federal or state projects. Individual property owners, or local governments working without federal aid, are not mandated to consider the historic value of the property, she said.

The lighthouses were originally proposed for listing in 1982, but the documents were lost, probably at the Department of Transportation Zimmerman said.

She said that it took more than two years to find all the papers. "It's been such a long time we're starting at square one. When dealing with several federal agencies, coordination is difficult. We will do our best to make sure there are not problems once it leaves our hands," Zimmerman stated.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

PLAN ON SELLING YOUR HOUSE NEXT WINTER?

Curb appeal is crucial whenever a house is on the market. The overall impression made by the landscaping and the exterior of the house often determines whether or not perspective buyers will want to go inside and how they will react to the home's interior.

If you decide to put your home on the market when the winter months roll around again, you may not get the extra help that Mother Nature often provides during the rest of the year, and it's doubly important to make the house itself look as good as it can. Flowering plants or colorful foliage won't be present to help dress-up your front yard. If your home has peeling paint or if the trim is not fresh looking, fix-ups may be in order before the "For Sale" sign goes up.

If there's a move in your future, the professionals at Home Center Realty are ready to serve your real estate needs. Call us at 749-8833 or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

Paintings of common exhibited

Cohasset's Town Common is a classic and unusually fine example of an old New England village green. In early days the Common was called simply "the common land", for it was owned by all the townspeople and was reserved for their free use.

Of the numerous old Town Commons found in New England, Cohasset's is one of the best known and most frequently visited. Here is the traditional "frog" or "duck" pond, actually a naturally formed glacial punch-bowl now edged by a walkway for strollers. The little pond displays its own center of attraction, a boulder containing a small fountain.

The Town Common always has been a place for townspeople to gather and for the activities of the community. Around its edge one can find the most important buildings of an early New England village, the town's churches and its Town Hall.

In Cohasset, the old Colonial Meeting House rests on the Common itself; a second church and the Town Hall are just across the street. Nearby streets are lined with the solidly built homes of the town's early Sea Captains and merchants.

In this view of Cohasset's Town Common as it appears on a summer's day, members of a family picnic near the pond, and have stopped to feed its resident population of ducks—and a visiting seagull or two—while a solitary boat-man pilots his skiff acorss the placid surface of the pond.

Beyond the common lies the ancient interface between land, harbor and sea which throughout the town's history has left its imprint on the lives of those who reside nearby. Historically, Cohasset was a seafaring village, and generations of the town's youth went to sea to fish and trade in distant waters. During America's Age of Sail, Cohasset's large fishing schooners filled its harbor and could be seen offshore, perhaps returning from a successful voyage with hold filled to bursting with valuable codfish or mackerel.

The granite lighthouse at Minot's Ledge guarded the town's seafarers and welcomed them home. To this day it blinks, 1-4-3, or I love you. The big mackerel schooners now are a chapter in the town's history, but offsbore waters play host to smaller sails of pleasure boats riding ocean breezes as did their hard working predecessors.

On this particular calm summer's day, a balloonist drifts placidly above the scene, perhaps observing with delighted eye the land and sea of this traditional New England town.

A primitive painting by Donna Green depicts a summer scene at Cohasset Common. Green, and her mother, B. Spencer Green, are popular primitive painters from the South Shore.

Artists Donna Green and mother, B. Spencer Green, will be the guests of Kit and Kaboodle Saturday Aug. 16, between 1 and 5 p.m. with a display of their paintings and latest prints.

Donna will sign her full color summer reproduction of Cohasset Common to follow her mother's winter version.

The public is invited to meet the artists and enjoy some wine & cheeses, compliments of Kit and Kaboodle, 64 South Main St., Cohasset Village. For more information, call 383-9667.

State talks about trouble with hazardous waste

er it be leukemia, birth defects or respiratory ailments."

Sargent said Question 4 will address the rate at which the state is taking on the problem.

"Just to give you a sense of where we're at," he told the audience, "only 60 sites have been cleaned up; and there are only 400 that have been confirmed.

"This means that a majority of the sites across the state have not been officially identified yet," he said. "What we need is a rapid commitment for dealing with this problem."

Sargent described the problem of groundwater contamination.

"Picture the stereotypical barrel you see on TV at hazardous waste sites," he said. "The ground under it is made up of layers of soil, maybe a little rock and then an acquifer, which is the underground river we dig our wells into.

"As that barrel rusts and begins leaking," he explained, "each time it rains, those toxins get pulled closer and closer to the ground water."

Sargent said the real issue is prevention, because once the water table is contaminated, it's almost impossible to restore.

The Question 4 proposal calls for the DEQE to complete a site identification program within two years, and investigations and on-site testing within another year after sites are listed.

The initiative also stipulates each dumpsite must then be cleaned up within two more years. Furthermore, if passed, the DEQE would have to invoke standards leading to a "permanent solution" for Massachusetts' hazardous waste problem.

"Another interesting element of this proposal," Sargent said, "is a provision for citizen participation." The initiative provides that courts may award attorney and expert witness fees to citizens who successfully sue to enforce provisions of the law.

He explained, "A lot of people all over the state have worked hard to get this initiative on the ballot."

Petitions with 150,000 signatures, along with endorsements from a myriad of groups and organizations, as well as the unanimous approval by the State House of Representatives landed Question 4 on November's ballot, according to Sargent.

Although no funding provision was written into the proposal, Sargent suggested the cost for such a program might be an additional $50 million added annually to the Commonwealth's $25 million Superfund budget.

"It's an issue of you can pay me now or you can pay me later," he said.

Barbara Valovic, hostess of the garden party queried, "You wonder why anyone thought that steel drums were good things to store toxins in, because they're not in this climate, where we have all of this dampness and salt air."

She added, "We had some water barrels in our greenhouse, where the climate is nice and temperate, and I think they lasted about five years.

"All they held was water, nothing toxic or caustic. Also, there were plastic liners and they were not exposed to the weather," she said.

"It makes me wonder about the ones that are in the ground."

Mobilia urged concerned citizens to make donations and to get involved in the campaign.

"We need to get the word out to people in the communities, who don't know about the severity of this problem," she said. "I'd like you to turn your concerns into active efforts."

Selectmen banish dogs from the town

Based on a recommendation from animal control officer Richard Yokum, selectmen voted Monday night to order two dogs owned by Deborah Lego of Summer Street to be banished from town.

In a letter to selectmen, Officer Yokum wrote that on July 27 he found a black labrador dog inside an abandoned vehicle at Wadleigh Park. Four days later a friend of Legos' notified police that Legos' black labrador was missing from home.

On August 6, Paul Mattes of Mendel Road, who had previously complained about the two dogs to selectmen, notified Yokum that the two dogs, a labrador and doberman owned by Legos, were tied outside the owner's home and the owner was gone. This was directly contrary to a previous ruling by selectmen that a pen be constructed for the two animals and that the dogs be allowed to stay in the outdoor pen only when Legos was home.

Selectmen were curious whether the dog had been stolen from the Legos' home. But Selectman Cliff Mitman recalled that the last time the issue was discussed, they warned Legos that another violation would result in the banishment of the two dogs. He also noted it was four days after the dog was missing before the animal control officer was notified. Selectman Mitman recommended that Officer Yokum order the two dogs out of town.

The order does not include an eight-month puppy owned by Legos. But selectmen warned if that canine was not controlled, it too would be ordered from town.

In other action Monday night, selectmen will review a proposal by Peter Wood of 77 Summer Street to control the traffic that cuts through the rise on Summer Street at the intersection of that street and Border Street. Wood explained that a small amount of traffic travels along the short distance, mistakenly thinking it is a short cut between the two streets. It is not the amount of traffic that travels on the road, but the high rate of speed by the motorists, he said. Wood suggested the street be made one-way, allowing the flow of traffic only from Border Street to Summer Street. The awkwardness of that turn would deter motorists from using the small incline where three homes are located.

Wood explained although the three neighbors agree there is a traffic problem there, one neighbor does not support a one-way solution.

"If you can come up with something better, then do," Wood said. "I've lived there since 1976 and had three animals killed and a close call with my daughter. It's a very dangerous situation."

"People think that turn is a short cut," Selectman James Gallagher said, "and it isn't."

Another suggestion was made that the road be converted into a dead end. Selectmen explained that such a solution will need town meeting approval. A citizens' petition is necessary to include such a proposal in the town meeting warrant. In the meantime, selectmen will need the opinions of the police, fire and highway departments on this proposal.

Among the other proposals selectmen will study include: no right turn off Summer Street, no left turn off Border Street, a dead end street or speed bumps on the small section of Summer Street. When selectmen next discuss the alternatives, the neighbors will be notified when the matter is on the agenda, they said.

In other matters, selectmen voted to hire Ellen Wynn of Cohasset as an assistant administrative secretary in the selectmen's office. She will be employed for 20 hours a week and will record the minutes of the selectmen's meetings. Candidates for the positions of part-time secretary for the police and fire departments are still being interviewed by police and fire chiefs.

Local arts funding

State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) 3rd Plymouth District has announced that three cultural groups in her district will be receiving financial awards over the next year from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities.

"I'm proud of the work these groups are doing, and of the contribution they're making to the quality of life in our area," said Rep. Murray.

The South Shore Art Center in Cohasset has been awarded $3,000 dollars and the South Shore Conservatory of Music in Hingham has been given $10,500 dollars.

The Council on the Arts and Humanities will celebrate its twentieth anniversary in September. Its programs reach all areas of the Commonwealth, including more than 400,000 schoolchildren. More than 500 cultural organizations will receive funding this year. Each of the state's 13 counties are served by Council programs.

A new career for a new town official doesn't even have a sign bylaw. Most towns don't," he said.

There is no 'typical' day for the new building inspector. "I try to be in office the first thing in the morning and the last thing in the afternoon," he said. "Throughout the day I'm out doing inspections. Anytime there is an application or a complaint, I have to do an inspection. I usually go out three or four times a day."

For instance, Robbins said, he will receive a complaint that a used car lot has too many cars on its property. Each lot is licensed for a specified amount. "If I get a complaint on the phone, I have to go over and count the cars. That's just one kind of complaint I handle here," he noted.

The majority of zoning issues involve determining building setbacks and minimum lot sizes. "Signs are a particular pain in the neck," he said, laughing. "Right now I'm in the process of citing several remodeling businesses. They're using advertising signs on people's property which are three times the size allowed by town bylaw. This is an on-going procedure and most of these guys are well aware of our regulation."

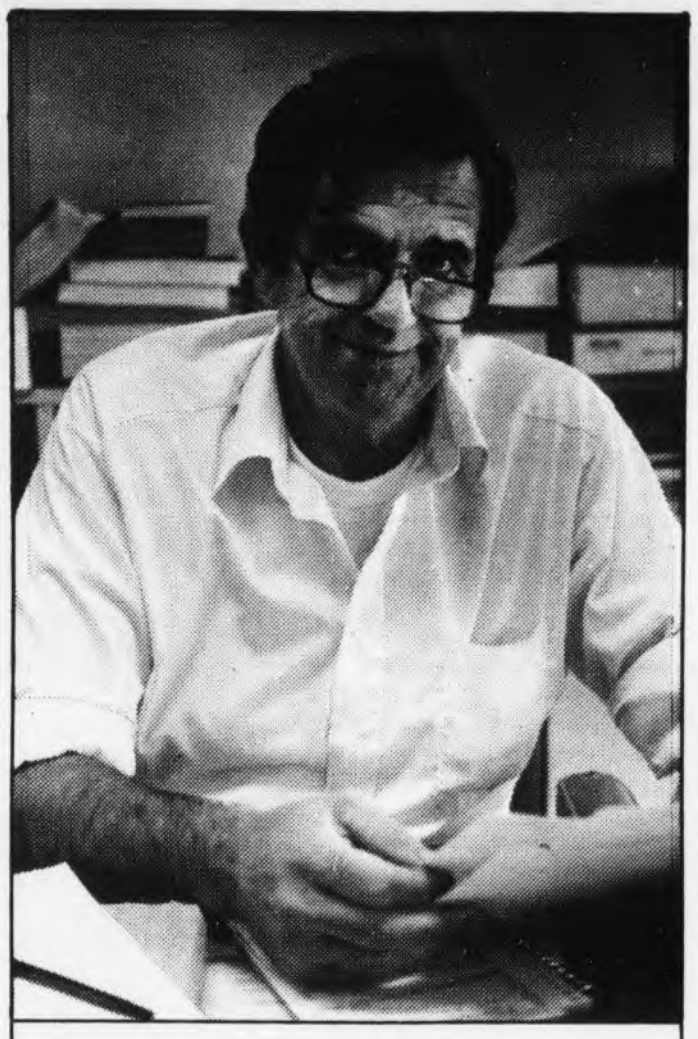
Fence heights are also a common dilemma in Cohasset, according to the building inspector and town's zoning enforcement officer. "The maximum height allowed is five feet, except for existing fences. But if I get a complaint, I have to go down and measure the fence," he said, displaying the camera he must bring along. "Evidence, in case it goes to court.

"We have many, many fence problems in town," Robbins continued. "The big problem now is that many fence permits were issued in error."

Political signs, he predicted, will be another nuisance to handle. The state attorney general has said political signs can not be prohibited in any community.

"I dislike them, but we have to allow them," he said, noting a town may regulate the size of the political advertisements.

Cohasset, according to the new inspector, is a nice town. "The people have been very cooperative and helpful, although our office space is very restrictive," he commented, displaying the cramped quarters he shares with a secretary, the plumbing inspector and years of paperwork and permits. "I guess they've turned down a new town hall about 15 times. But if we're required to maintain records, we have to have a place to put them. This office is just too small."



Don Robbins

Robbins, who is discouraging his four sons from entering the remodeling business, said he plans to retire from his new post. "I'll stay here until I retire," he said. "I knew it was the type of job where you meet the public and get involved with people. But at 5 p.m. you can leave the office and forget about it. That's what I needed.

"The kids are grown now. I don't need a million dollars anymore. This job will help increase my chances of longevity," he said with a chuckle. "I needed to get away from the stress."

There are no politics involved in this job, as far as Robbins is concerned.

"I have a clear cut job to do, and I'll make sure I do it fairly for everyone," he said. "I have the town's bylaws here and the state building code and that's what I go by. There's no room here for politics."

The Dorchester native is comfortable with his new job. "A year ago, I thought I might be interested in serving as Norwell's building inspector," he noted. "But now I realize there are certain advantages to living outside the community where you work. I have no lifelong friends here in Cohasset. I have a lot in Norwell."

☐ Steven B. Getto and Gregory P. Igo of Cohasset have achieved distinction and have been named to the second-semester dean's list for the 1985-86 academic year at Colby College, Waterville, Maine.

Geto, a junior administrative science major is the son of Barry I. Getto. He prepared for college at Middlesex School.

Igo, a freshman majoring in economics and psychology, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul F. Igo. He prepared for college at Cohasset Junior-Senior High School.

☐ Benjamin Kennedy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald B. Kennedy of 41 Stevens Lane has begun a five month work assignment with Felix Rotin in Paris, where he is involved in the retail management department.

In July, Kennedy, a business major, completed an intensive language program at the University of Poitiers in Royan, France. He will return to Northeastern in December to resume his undergraduate studies.

☐ Five undergraduates from Cohasset made the Dean's List at UMass/Boston in the spring semester: Elizabeth Colburn of Jerusalem Rd., Jennifer Johnson of Forest Ave., Mark McCarthy of Bancroft Rd., Kevin Patrolia of Cedar Acres Lane and Sandra Wiggans of Pond Street.

☐ Happy birthday to Norman!

☐ If you are wondering where "Hooga" has been, he has been a busy guy . . . Laurence E. Hoogeveen, son of Dot and Laurence J. Hoogeveen, has graduated from Air Force basic training at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. He is now known as Airman Hoogeveen, and looks pretty sharp in his new uniform!

☐ Just imagine Mrs. George Williard Smith, who is celebrating her 100th birthday August 21. With all that she has experienced in her lifetime, she could fill Around Town for several months!! Mrs. Smith is Alison Jordan's mother, and two nicer women cannot be found. Our hearty congratulations to you, Mrs. Smith.

☐ Ruth and Harold Goodwin are having a super time lately. Their granddaughter is in town for a nice long vist. Her name is Jennifer Sve, and she is here from Palos Verdes Estates, located in California. Jennifer is the daughter of Ruth (Goodwin) and Dr. Charles Sve. She sure has come to Cohasset at the right time; it is so exciting to see the movie being filmed! When she gets back to sunny California, she can take all of her friends to the Witches of Eastwick and show them all "Mom's home town." What fun!

☐ You probably won't believe it when you see it in print, but it is time for physicals again! Football and soccer, that is. Football physicals will be on the 21st at 1 p.m. at the high school, soccer will be on the 22nd at 9 a.m., also at the high school. After that, fall sports are officially underway!

☐ Mr. Vanderlugt and his crew at Hub Shipping are mighty upset after last week and who can blame them! Their five-year-old Hub Shipping Company sign (black with gold lettering) was stolen last week, and they would love to have it back! It was in the ground on five foot long posts, and someone still managed to steal it . . . whoever you are, please return it, there won't be any questions asked.

☐ If you think that's bad, hold onto your hats! Had a long chat with Ginny Delaney last week and she had a real horror story for all to hear! As you all know, last week was the year anniversary of Ginny's son Mark's death, and a lot of people (including many of his friends) had marked the occasion by leaving potted plants by Mark's grave. When Ginny went back to plant them the following day, they were all gone . . . they had been stolen! Needless to say, both family and friends are disturbed that someone would just walk away with the flowers left out of love, and all feel something should be done about it. It's hard to imagine someone stealing anything out of a cemetery, but it seems to be a rather common occurrence. If you know anything about this, go to the police and tell them; they are on the lookout for any and all clues. It's hard to believe that anyone could further upset families by doing such a horrible thing. . . .

No power play

During this summer lull in municipal meetings, we focus our attention on other events.

Summer is a time for leisure and more pleasurable pursuits. But for many town officials, the work lingers throughout the summer months.

While many vacation away from home, while teachers take a brief respite from the classroom and professionals lock up the office for a few weeks of rest, elected and appointed officials must still attend to the town's business.

They deserve our admiration and respect - for staying with the job when it would be so easy to shirk from their duties. Who wants to attend a Monday night meeting after a weekend of sailing, swimming, and relaxation? But week after week, members of our health board, planning board, zoning board and selectmen meet for several hours in a steamy town hall auditorium or the hearing room of the Bates Building.

They deserve our appreciation and respect.

But what about the public? Do we not deserve the same?

It has come to our attention, from a variety of persons and places, that many residents of this town are simply not treated with a trace of dignity when they are called in front of some town boards.

This does not apply to all town commissions and boards. But there are some town officials who treat applicants with downright disdain. They look upon all applicants or petitioners with suspicion and contempt.

It is the duty of our town officials to review all sides of an issue. It would not be proper to approve all requests before them. Questions must be asked, and answers must be provided.

But this judicial review can and should be done in a proper, dignified manner. No one, no developer, property owner or private citizen should be treated in a demeaning manner. They are guilty of no crime, and should not be accused of such by any town official.

Complaints about the attitude of some elected town officials have surfaced in recent conversations. Many residents, naive about the machinations of municipal government, argued they have not been treated decently by those holding the position of power.

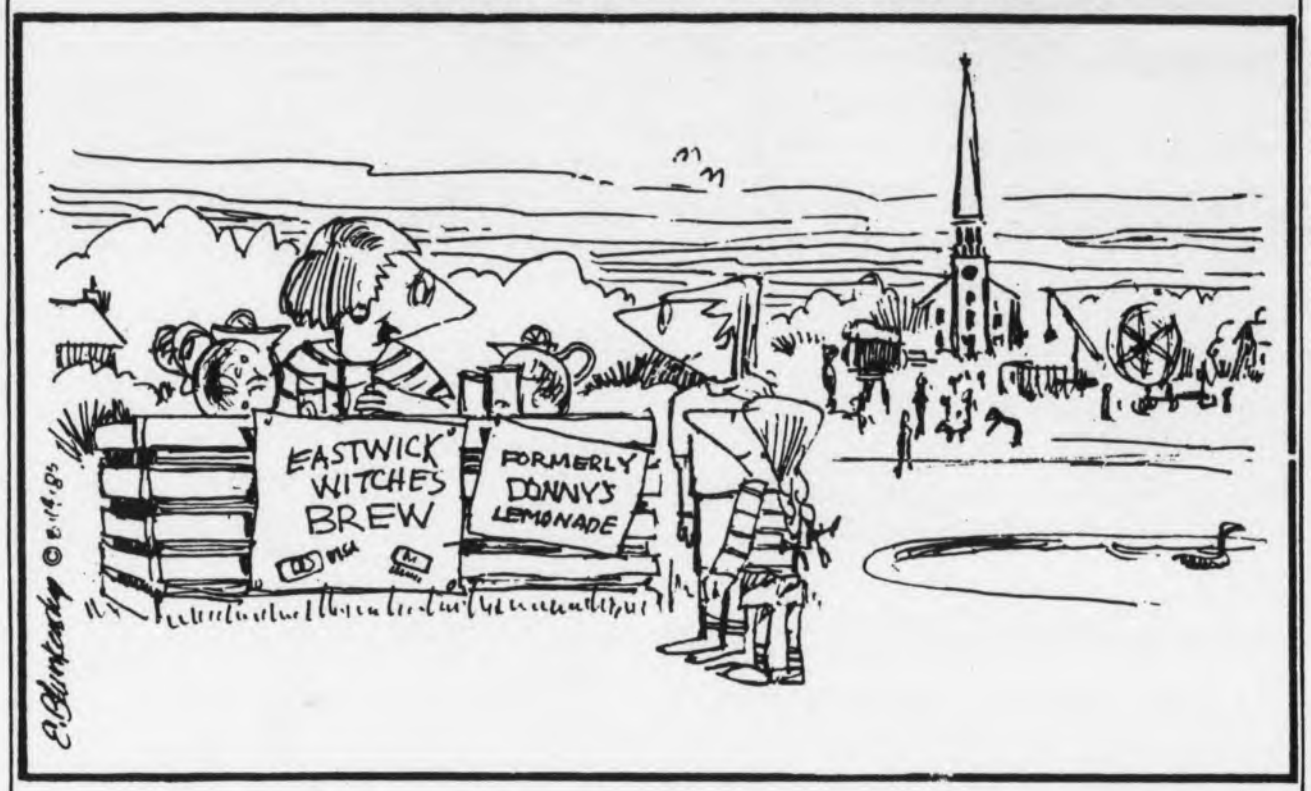
This is wrong. Town officials have every responsibility to have their questions answered honestly, and to ask them in a courteous manner. No one is guilty until proven otherwise.

But there is an alternative. If people in this community complain about the pompous attitude of their town officials, then it is time for a change.

If you believe the public is being cheated by an uncaring, insensitive official, than do not re-elect him or her. It may not be easy to find a person willing to campaign against an incumbent, but it is imperative.

Town officials who believe the public is subservient to their power, must be replaced. It is up to that disgruntled citizen to seek out an alternative - someone who is willing to hear all sides of an issue, who believes that everyone is entitled to an opportunity and deserves respect.

NEWS ITEM — Cohasset: Hundreds of people, mostly out-of-towners, toddlers, vacationing business people, grey-haired seniors, gather behind barricades to catch sight of Jack Nicholson, the three star witches of "The Witches of Eastwick" being filmed. Money spent on actors' lodging, location fees, plus burgeoning business for town merchants' goods and services, restaurants and hostelries, is icing on the cake



"...I say, go with the tide...make it while you can..."

Movie extras treated with respect

Letters

To the Editor:

I am hoping the cast and crew of Warner Bros., presently in Cohasset, read this letter so they will know their attitude (since the first came to this town) isn't going unnoticed or unappreciated by this townspeople.

When I was asked to be an extra I said "yes" but being out of touch with what's what in cinema land, I really didn't know why I was doing it. I knew the less than minimum wage per hour wasn't going to make me rich and I wasn't naive enough to think I'd ever be seen in the end product.

Now I know why I did it. I did it to enjoy the privilege of watching Jack Nicholson act—to admire George Miller's endless patience—to watch the conglomerate of creative genius headed by Vilmos- to be complimented by Susan's treatment of the children—to study Cher and Michelle up close--to learn who Neil Canton is—to treasure Veronica Cartwright's autograph—to see Chris' smile after a good shot—to be in awe of Bob's gentle manner with a crowd of tired extras—to see how quickly Alex appeared on the scene when the pin dropped—to notice that the wardrobe, make-up, sound and all the crew members are such professionals—to wonder if somebody was "somebody" and last but not least to see Dan's smile at 7a.m. and again at 9p.m. after 14 hours of work and in general to learn that the "movie people from Hollywood" are not the obnoxious prima donnas that society enjoys portraying.

There are many people I never met or forgot to mention but there was not one person in that troupe who did not treat me with dignity. For a few days I play acted in fantasy land with the "biggies" (the way we used to do in our attics). As Bob Yannetti would say at the end of every night, "Thanks guys".

An 'anti-nuclear' jackal rebutts

To the Editor:

At the risk of being called an "anti-nuclear jackal" for raising uncomfortable questions about the safety of nuclear power plants, I write both to condemn the name calling and to continue the legitimate and needed debate.

Points stressed over and over again by the voice of energy's Mr. Campbell of Cohasset are not necessarily the whole truth, and calling the other side "jackals" must reveal a growing desperation as the heretofore easy road to nuclear power is beset with detours and perhaps, before long, a road closed sign.

Do your readers know that ads by the U.S. Committee for Energy Awareness (read: nuclear industry) in the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal, the Boston Globe, the Washington Post, USA Today, and major networks, which minimized the similarities between US nuclear power plants and the USSR Chernobyl plant were labeled, "deceptive and irresponsible" by the Safe Energy Communication Council, a coalition of 15 national environmental and safe energy groups? They called the ads a "calculated attempt to diffuse legitimate questions about the safety of U.S. nuclear power plants."

Further, recent revelations by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission show that the Chernobyl plant did have a containment structure similar to many in the U.S. Why doesn't the Voice of Energy admit this?

The Safe Energy Communication Council has also made public NRC reports admitting that "nearly one-third of US containment structures are likely to fail soon after a major core reactor meltdown and that there is a 45 percent probability for a severe core meltdown in the USA within the next 19 years."

We middle-aged and older will remember that 30 or 40 years ago we were convinced that power from the peaceful atom would be cheap and safe. Surely the best service the Voice of Energy can do for us now is to admit that the questions now being raised about rising costs and public safety, especially the latter, are the legitimate work of responsible citizens, not jackals.

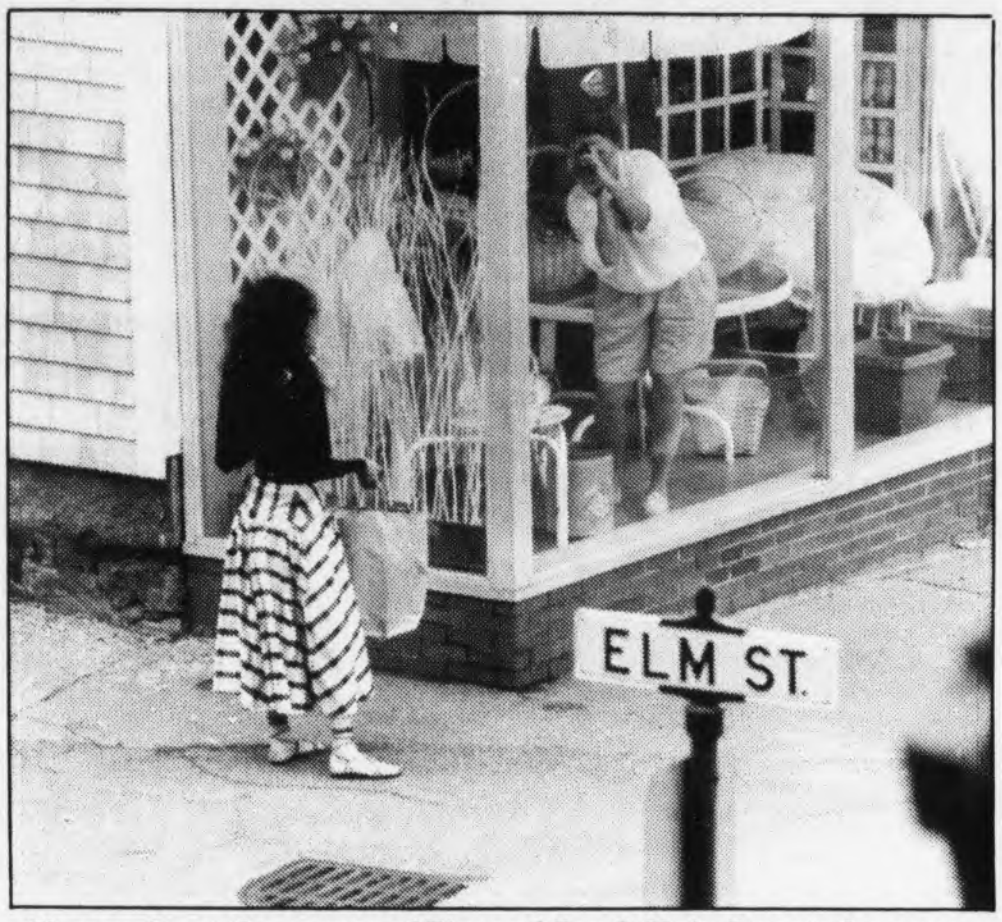
Summer days on the 'Eastwick' scene

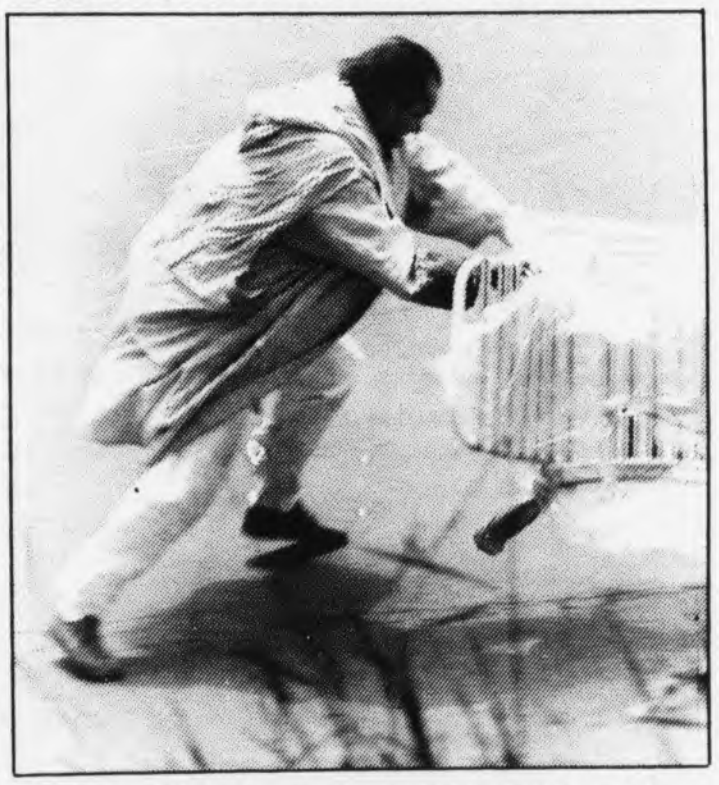


Cher waits at the corner of Elm and South Main Streets for a cue for action.

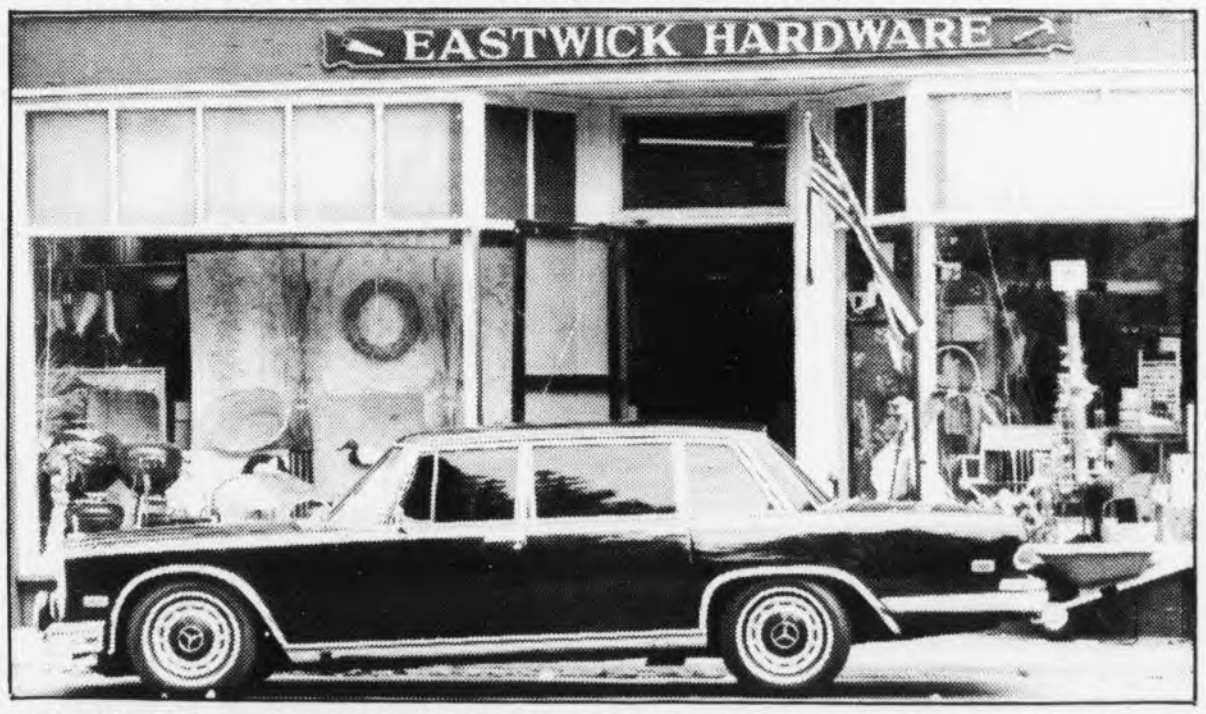
Director George Miller directs traffic in this scene starring Cher.

A single feather rests among some bushes along Elm Street — a single reminder of the day the hurricane blew into town this week.

The beautiful collie, often seen chasing the ducks around the common pond, actually became a movie star during Tuesday's filming.



Jack Nicholson, in another hurricane scene where he and some lawn furniture get blown down Elm Street.



The black Mercedes, parked in front of the hardware store, is the perfect vehicle for the devil.

Boston man pleads innocent to Rte. 3A crash

Floyd S. Hardwick, 47, of Boston, pleaded innocent last week in Hingham District Court on charges of drunken driving and operating to endanger. The charges stemmed from a Saturday night accident in which the car driven by Hardwick collided with the car containing "The Witches of Eastwick" actress Cher.

A court conference on the charges is scheduled for September.

The accident occurred at the intersection of Routes 3A and 228 in Hingham about 7 p.m. Saturday. The station wagon in which Cher was a passenger was struck by the vehicle driven by Hardwick. The Chevrolet wagon was pushed into a 1977 Cadillac which then swerved to the left and struck an oncoming Dodge Ram truck.

Several persons, including Cher, were taken to South Shore Hospital by Hingham police. They were all released after treatment.

In addition to Cher, who underwent X-rays for a possible back injury, other persons treated at the hospital included her boyfriend, Joshua Donen, 30, of Beverly Hills, Calif. and her chauffeur, Joseph Cuggiano, 47, of Acton.

Passengers of the Cadillac who were treated at the hospital included Lorraine Buxton, Cathy Richard, 39, Robert Buxton, 36, and Melanie Buxton, 10, all of Worcester. They had been in Cohasset throughout the day watching the filming of the movie.

Hardwick was also treated and released from the hospital.

Cher was returning from the day's filming in Cohasset Village. The station wagon had stopped for a traffic light as it was headed on the northbound side of Route 3A.

Although Cher was described by film crew members as "shook up," she was expected to be back to work later this week. Prior to the accident, Cher was not expected to return to Cohasset until later this week.

Dilemma of the chair people

The building inspector and selectmen are becoming increasingly aggitated by the person selling chairs along the Route 3A roadside.

According to a letter written by Building Inspector Don Robbins, a man from South Carolina was selling the chairs at 585 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. This is a prohibited use, according to town bylaw, Robbins stated. In addition, the sign used on the property to advertise the chair sales is in violation of the town's sign bylaw. Robbins noted Police Chief Joseph Kealey ordered the peddler off the property. "If he is on it again, I will seek an injunction and restraining order in court," he noted.

Selectmen Diane Sullivan said Monday the peddler is now at a different Route 3A location. "I've been told he has a state peddler's license. But I would like to see him removed. It's dangerous—he shouldn't be there," she said.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew said the peddler is likely in violation of town bylaws and he will check with the building inspector about that.

In an aside to the board members, Selectmen Rocco Laugelle noted his sister owns the property on which the peddler is now located.

The Jessie B. Cox Charitable Trust has awarded a grant of $100,000 to Kenneth C. Edelin, M.D. for an innovative project designed to understand and affect the relationship between low birth-weigh babies and poverty.

To minimize or eliminate the factors which may cause low birth-weight, the one-year project will focus on educating physicians so that they understand which aspects of poverty have a negative impact on the outcome of pregnancy.

The Cox Charitable Trust has also pledged an additional $100,000 for a second year of this low birth-weight program, pending evaluation of the project after the first year.

Conservatory gift

The South Shore Conservatory of Music has received a gift of $10,000 from the South Shore Playhouse Associates, directors of the Music Circus in Cohasset. James Simpson, Conservatory director, announced that the gift will be used toward the purchase and repair of pianos in the Duxbury branch of the school.

The South Shore Conservatory is a non profit community school of the arts. It offers lessons in music, dance and drama to all ages and levels of ability in three locations, Hingham, Duxbury and Brockton. Piano has one of the largest enrollments at the school.

"Keeping good instruments available for the use of the students and faculty is essential in maintaining the Conservatory's high standards of instruction," explained Simpson. "We are most grateful to the Playhouse Associates for this generous gift. It will fulfill our paino needs for the Duxbury school."

Area resident board cool to rail plan

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

The citizens' advisory committee studying the impact of restoring the Old Colony Railroad reacted coolly to a Route 3-based rail proposal.

Consultants also told committee members they will begin a second round of public-information meetings next month in the towns affected by possible restoration.

Members said the Route 3 rail idea, proposed in a public meeting last month in Hingham, may have an adverse effect on federal funding for possible restoration of the three-branch rail system.

"Federal funding of $200 million hinges on restoring existing lines," said interim Chairman Terry N. Fancher. "There were never any rights-of-way on Route 3."

Federal funds are available for restoration of mass-transit systems, but only along existing or former railbeds.

Budget cuts under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill should not affect the funds, Fancher said.

Hingham officials, who called the superhighway "the spine of the South Shore," suggested a new rail line along Route 3 as an alternative to the Greenbush line. That line would serve Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate, but runs through densely-populated areas of Hingham.

Fancher and Steve Polechronis, an MBTA consultant in the restoration study, said their initial reaction would be to exclude the Route 3 proposal from the study.

"I'm assuming a citizens' committee will be formed to study widening Route 3," Fancher said, "and that would be within their study."

One OCRR committee member called the Hingham proposal "a diversionary tactic by a small group of people."

If a Route 3 line were to be built, more roads would have to be built for Scituate and Cohasset commuters, he said.

In a related discussion, member Richard Bowen, also a Scituate selectman, asked whether the impact of not restoring the Greenbush line— which once ended near the border between Scituate and Marshfield — could be included in the upcoming impact study.

"Plymouth County grew by 60 percent between 1960 and 1980, yet its main avenue has not grown. I think we all know it's going to get worse, not better," Bowen said. "The no-build alternative for the Greenbush line is no alternative, period."

In other matters, consultant Pamela Wolfe told committee members the second round of MBTA meetings in communities that would be affected by restoration will begin next month.

Consultants are scheduled to meet with Weymouth residents and officials Tuesday, Sept. 9. During the week of Sept. 22, the group will meet in Holbrook Monday evening, in Braintree Wednesday and in Cohasset Thursday.

Wolfe said the group, which includes MBTA officials and representatives of Sverdrup Corp. of Cambridge, wants to gain residents' comments on placing stations on the three rail lines. She promised plenty of advance publicity about the meetings in each town.

"We want to hear the questions, comments and ideas of a broad spectrum of residents in each town," she said.

Before asking for public comment, consultants will give a presentation on the Old Colony system and progress in the restoration study, Wolfe said.

Harbor Festival to mark 'Etrusco' rescue

Aug. 16-17 will offer an opportunity to enjoy part of the South Shore's unique maritime heritage at the 10th annual Hull Harbor Festival.

Breeches buoy rides will be available free at the Hull Lifesaving Museum, 1117 Nantasket Ave., Saturday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The breeches buoy, which consists of a pair of canvas shorts attached to a life ring, was last used on the South Shore during the rescue of the "Etrusco" in Scituate.

The weekend will also offer a chance to see the famed "36500" lifeboat at Hull's Mariner Park Saturday and Sunday, between 10 and 4.

The "36500" is visiting from Orleans. In 1952, its crew earned gold medals rescuing the "Pendleton" which had broken in two off Chatham and lost radio contact.

At 10:30 a.m. Saturday, pulling boats will race from Mariners Park in the annual Row 'Round Hull out through Hull Gut. A recently restored Massachusetts Humane Society boat from the glades in Scituate hopes to be among the entrants.

At historic Fort Revere guarding the entrance to Boston Harbor, there will be an art exhibit and children's fair from 10 to 4 Saturday, with a rain date on Sunday.

The day will be capped off with a raffling of a beautiful lighthouse quilt, featuring the Statue of Liberty and other unusual lighthouses, including Minot's Light.

For more information, please call 925-LIFE.

Schedule of events for Troop 28 Boy Scouts

Troop 28 Boy Scouts spent a fun week at Camp Resolute of the Algonquin Council in Bolton. The scouts earned merit badges, which will help them advance in rank. Nicholas Lelecas received the Panther and Troop Award.

Thank you to the boy scouts who helped with the Cub Scout Day Camp held at Wheelwright Park, Cohasset. Over seventy cubs attended under the direction of Hazel Edmonds from Hull and Rick Poirier, Old Colony Council District Executive. Swim team claims 4th victory

In their fourth victory of the 1986 season the Cohasset swim team defeated the Plymouth Eel River swim club, 349 to 174.

Because the meet had to be postponed from Friday until Monday, many of the originally scheduled swimmers could not attend. Nevertheless, the swimmers filling in at the last minute did an excellent job, especially Jon Hislop, Sarah Kirk, Nicole Greco, and Chip Anderson who swam one or two age groups above their own.

Ten year old David Leahey continued his streak of un 'efeated swims and gained three individual firsts Becky Golden also won three firsts. The two helpe.(the team to another blue ribbon when they were joined by Tracy Reardon and KatedeLima in the mixed medley relay.

Other swimmers who contributed three personal firsts to the team were Robin DeVito, Christopher Henderson and Mathew Buckley.

Brooke Anderson, Peter Buckley, Jon deLima, Thomas Greco, Dawn Meehan all received two individual firsts and played an important role in first place relay teams. Single wins went to Danny Baird, Kay Long, Liz Buckley, Joel Whitman, Caroline Delima, Veronica Devos, Kate Delima, Matt Larson, Chip Anderson, Melissa Rousseau, Amy Hoggs, Greg Novin.

The relays topped off the meet with a first in eight of 13 races.

Stars of the week were Emily Henderson, Heather Littlehale, Kay Long, and Barbara Migliaccio. These swimmers show dedication, positive attitude and team spirit.

A banner weekend for the Cadets

Sea Cadets from nine divisions along the Atlantic seaboard, including a group of three young men representing Bermuda's three divisions, participated in an Operational Readiness Inspection last weekend at St. Mary's Field overlooking Scituate Harbor.

Despite the intermittent rains, hundreds of young men and women thrived during the three-day encampment and walked away with trophies following stiff competition among their units.

But the highlight of the U.S. Naval Sea Cadet program were two parades during the 19th annual Heritage Days observances.

Led by the honor guard and color guard from the USS Constitution who wore 19th century period Naval uniforms, the Sea Cadets marched from the Gates School in Scituate Center to the town pier.

At the pier, a second parade of decorated boats passed by the fantail of the Coast Guard cutter Cape Henlopen.

Monsignor Eugene McNamara of St. Mary of the Nativity Church blessed the fleet which included a 26-foot-long lifeboat owned by the F.B. Battle Division of Sea Cadets in Scituate.

The vessel still bears the name Bluenose II and its homeport, Yarmouth, England. The original Bluenose was a schooner, and the second one was a cruise ship.

The lifeboat is among five similar vessels donated by the Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics to various Sea Cadet divisions in New England. Another Bluenose is based at Davisville, R.I., where the Sea Cadets undergo boot camp.

In the boat parade, Cmdr. Frederick B. Battle was coxswain, and 16 teenagers from the Battle Division rowed in unison.

Local youth included Edward Swedock, Tony Harrington, Timothy O'Brien, Kurt Zschau, Silvano Pereria, Christopher Carchia, Mike Castignetti and Josephine Angelo.

Other oarsmen included Jason Tetrault and Scott Clifford of the Wasp Battalion, based in South Weymouth; William Hayden, Robert Walker and James DiGregorio of the Constitution Battalion, based in Boston; and Peter Merhige and Anthony Cardin of the DeSalvo Division, based in Albany, N.Y.

Coming from the farthest distance was Simon Tully, who also rowed. His father, Lt. Cmdr. Derek Tully, and two other cadets, Ian Card and Jermaine Robertson, represented their country.

The all-day competition on Saturday included knot tying, stretcher races, semaphore, Morse code and other events. The F.B. Battle Division won several awards.

The Navy League cadets competed among their age group—between 11 and 14 years.

The F.B. Battle Division won first place for personnel inspection, followed by the Groton, Conn. Division, and the Wasp Division. Cadets Witkowski, Gorman and Lavoie placed third in the knot-tying competition.

The Sea Cadets, who are between 14 and 18 years of age, also competed. The Battle Division placed second in the color guard and line heaving competitions, which featured Cadets Fitzpatrick, Carchia and Harvey. Cadets Lavoie, Gorman and Cheverie also placed second in the knot-tying contest.

Sixteen Sea Cadets rowed the 26-foot lifeboat Bluenose II in unison in The Scituate Harbor boat parade last weekend.

During last weekend's encampment, Sea Cadets demonstrated their firefighting skills during the flagship competition.

Matt Weaver of Scituate stands watch for four hours during the Sea Cadet encampment.

TIC golf tournament

Talking Information Center Golf Tournament Coordinator Barbara Elliott of Cohasset announced that the Ninth Annual TIC Tournament will be played this year September 8, at the Marshfield Country Club.

"We're thrilled to be coming back to Marshfield again this year," said Elliott. "Last year's tournament was our biggest and most successful yet. We raised over $8,000 for the Center."

Talking Information Center (TIC) is a radio reading service for the blind and print handicapped. The service provides the daily reading of newspapers, best selling books, magazines, calendars of community events, shopping guides and educational material to anyone unable to read conventional print material because of a physical or visual handicap.

A special event at the tournament is "The Equalizer," a special putting contest. In honor of seven-time national blind golf champion Joe Lazaro, an annual participant in the tournament, entrants are blindfolded and try to sink a long putt.

"It's amazing how people's views change once they put that blindfold on." said Elliott. "We actually had people wondering what we were going to do if three or four people sank the putt, how we would determine a winner. Well, in the seven years we've had the putting contest, no-one has sunk one yet!"

"It really lets people know what TIC is all about," said Bersani. "They can vicariously, if only for a moment, wonder what it would be like without their sight."

Anyone interested in participating in this year's TIC Tournament should contact Bob Greenhalgh, Host Pro, at the Marshfield Country Club at 837-9353, or Ron Bersani at 834-4400.

'Captains Walk' depicts centuries of sail

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Historical Commission's recently completed "Captains Walk" around the edge of the town's harbor provides a look at the harbor as it was a century ago, when seafaring was the major industry found in this small New England coastal village.

For the first two centuries of its existence Cohasset was a thriving fishing and mercantile port and center for an active shipbuilding industry. The port facilities and shipyards were located at Cohasset Harbor, known in earlier days as Ship Cove. Earliest records, written when Cohasset still was a part of Hingham, indicate that shipbuilding was being carried on at Ship Cove in the first years of the 18th century. The sites of the first shipyards is not known today, but the builders' names were Wilson and Souther.

By the opening decades of the 19th century, Cohasset-built and owned fishing fleets were active in offshore waters, seeking cod and mackerel. At that time, the largest shipyard at Ship Cove was on the harbor's northeast edge, near today's Margin Street. At the "New Shipyard" both fishing schooners and large square-rigged vessels could be seen under construction. Fishing businesses and their support industries lined the harbor's shores, and three old stone wharves first built for family-owned fishing fleets can still be found along Border Street. Early fishing schooners were small vessels with bluff bows and were called Pinkies, but by the mid-19th century larger, faster two-mastered schooners called "clipper schooners" with sharp bows and rakish lines brought the town to the pinnacle of its seafaring era. Cohasset clipper schooners voyaged north each summer to fish for the plentiful mackerel off the shores of Canada's Maritime Provinces.

The town's peak years as a mackerel port occurred just before the Civil War, when Cohasset briefly ranked among the largest ports of Massachusetts in size of catch landed. During the years 1855 to 1860 Cohasset Harbor was the site of an engineering project as the U.S. Lighthouse Board and the Army Corps of Engineers undertook the construction of a granite lighthouse at outer Minot's Ledge some 2 1/2 miles offshore from the Harbor's entrance. At Government Island on the eastern shore of the harbor more than one thousand large granite blocks were carefully cut, shapped and fitted together to form the structure of the tower, before being transported one by one to the offshore ledge where the final construction of the lighthouse was done. Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, a tower 114 feet high, was built of Quincy granite and was first turned on in 1860. Originally intended to wary seafarers away from the treacherous Cohasset Rocks, Minot's still shows its unique signal to ocean liners and yachtsmen alike.

The Cohasset Historical Commission, a town agency active in historical preservation within Cohasset, recently completed its "Captains' Walk" project commemorating the seafaring history and tradition of early Cohasset. In place around the edges of "Ship Cove" one can find a series of signs and maps depicting the harbor as it appeared during the great "Age of Sail". Beginning at Government Island the signs of the Captains' Walk note the location of the buildings and structures associated with the construction of the lighthouse. Today a small historical park also marks the site of that 19th century engineering landmark. The walk follows Border Street westward past the location of Cohasset businessman Elisha Doane's 1792 tidal grist mill and mill dam at the mouth of the Gulf.

The old mill site became Tower's east or lumber wharf shortly after the mid 1800's, and today is a boatyard. A bit further westward on Border Street one sees the three old stone wharves originally belonging to the Tower, Bates and Doane (later Lawrence) families, early fishing businesses. Today, all three wharves still are active. Tower Wharf contains a restaurant, Bates Wharf is owned and operated under a preservation trust, and Lawrence Wharf is the Town Landing. Of the three, Bates Wharf is the oldest, having been built by Samuel Bates in the mid-1700's. Lawrence Wharf contains the town's comemmorative marker to the discoverer of our harbor, Capt. John Smith who visited here in the year 1614. Still further westward along Border Street, as one approaches the head of Ship Cove, Historical Commission signs note the original locations of "Portugese Hall", meeting place of the Minot's Ledge Portugese Benevolant Association and of the U.S. Customs House for the district of Cohasset. Both old buildings were moved from their original sites to Summer Street, where the Customs House is today's Legion Hall. At the head of the Cove, where James Brook passes under the road, an early bridge was constructed on the road from Hingham. Variously called the Border Street or Cove Bridge, that early structure, now replaced by an underground culvert, once was lined with several small stores.

In modern Cohasset, a complex of small buildings along with an ancient ironworks and carriage making factory at the head of the Cove has given way to a motel, and several old stone wharves are buried beneath new land just where Margin Street begins. This old "landing and loading place" is shown by a sign located on the east side of Cove Road. The Captains' Walk swings eastward along Margin Street for some distance to indicate the site of the town's largest 19th century shipyard, the "New Shipyard" which, for half a century, was located where Yankee Oil's corporate headquarters now can be seen. Many of the fishing schooners of early days were built at the Margin Street yard, as were larger vessels such as the full rigged ship "Greenwich". In all, the Historical Commission has noted ten sites around the perimeter of the cove and has marked each with a small sign giving a capsule history of the site. Three large maps of the Harbor showing it as it was a century or more ago can be seen at key points along the walk, with each individual site or "station" shown.

The "Captains' Walk" represents the culmination of several years of planning and research by volunteer members of the Historical Commission and numerous consultants drawn from interested residents of the town. Funding for the project was generously contributed by private businesses, individual citizens, and from grant money made available to the Commission.

In creating the Captains Walk, the Commission realizes that not all of the many details of the Cove's history could be included; the walk is intended to show some of the important sites and locations found to have existed during the town's "two centuries of sail".

"Today, the fishing schooners no longer tie up at the wharves of Border Street, the early ironworks and the shipyard are gone; what remains is perhaps but a hint of the bustling activity once associated with Cohasset's seafaring venture at the Harbor.

The Historical Commission's "Captains' Walk" is designed to bring alive once again an image of an old New England fishing and mercantile harbor which played such an important role in the lives of townspeople in an era now past.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Watch for the homegrown canned tomatoes at the fair

To take a giant step backwards in time, walk through the Marshfield fairgrounds, past the ferris wheel and booths of stuffed animals to the exhibition hall. Down in the cool of the basement are vegetables adorned with blue ribbons, vases of homegrown cosmos or zinnias, jars of tomatoes handsomely preserved by industrious housewives.

Display counters are heavy with red cabbages, carrots, onions, peppers and squash, the same as farmers down through the years have entered for judging at the fair.

This recipe from Barbara Pearson calls for canned tomatoes, but as any gardener knows, it's that time of year when one can be overwhelmed with the season's bounty of tomatoes and perhaps you can subsitute the home-grown variety for this

TOMATO PUFF

2 c. canned tomatoes
1 1/2 c. soft bread crumbs
3/4 c. grated sharp cheese
1 tsp. salt
3 beaten egg yolks
3 beaten egg whites

Mix first five ingredients together, then fold in stiffly beated egg whites. Bake 45 min. in 350 oven. Serves 4 to 6.

Summer, winter, spring and fall we all make tracks for the supermarket to replenish our food supplies. This "Curse Poem" by Elisavietta Ritchie speaks for many of us after an all too-familiar encounter at the check-out. She addressed this verse to the woman who shoved her shopping cart ahead of her at the check-out: "May the wheels of your cart catch on the curb, bags split, cherries roll all over the parking lot...May you bring home moths in your grapenuts, weevils in jars, slugs in your greens ...carpenter bees in your bags, a roach in your rolls, mold in your bundt, soap in your pie...And may your check bounce."

And yet another survey; this one by Conde Nast Publishing Co. yields some interesting data regarding womens' shopping habits: they are purchasing more diet soda, more skim milk, more fresh produce, more cheese, but less butter. They also buy more foods containing sugar substitutes, potassium and fiber. Seventy-eight percent said they used commercial cake mixes; for 22 percent, price is the determinant when shopping for food and four out of five said they read food labels. Fifty percent of the women said their eating patterns have changed, due to the fact that family members were not sitting down to dinner together, but were eating at separate times. For the latter reason, a casserole is often the answer. Made ahead, it may be kept warm so that the family can help themselves to Milly Carr's delicious

CHICKEN SURPRISE

Butter 2 slices of bread and cube. Spread in pan.
Mix together:
3 1/2 c. cooked chicken
1/2 c. chopped celery
1/2 c. chopped onion
1/2 c. mayonnaise
1 tsp. salt

Put all on top of bread. Butter four slices of bread and cube. Spread over chicken. Beat 1 1/2 c. milk and two eggs. Pour over casserole and chill overnight. Before baking in the morning, mix:
1 can cream of mushroom or chicken soup and 1/2 c. water. Pour over top. Add grated cheese if desired. Bake, uncovered, in 350 oven for 40 min. approx.

The next time you shop, pick up the ingredients for this delicious recipe. It's one I tore out of the paper quite some time ago and I made it for the food table at a church fair—delicious!

FRUIT BREAD

1 8-oz. pkg. cream cheese, softened
1 c. margarine
1 1/2 c. sugar
1 1/2 tsp. vanilla
4 eggs
2 1/2 c. flour
1 1/2 tsp. baking powder
1 17-oz. can fruit cocktail, drained
1/2 c. chopped nuts

Blend first four ingredients. Add eggs one at a time, mixing well each time. Gradually add flour and baking powder. Fold in fruit and nuts. Pour into two greased and floured loaf pans. Bake at 325 degrees for one hour. Cool in pans for 5 to 10 min.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Getting ready to go 'back to school'

"Before we know it," I told the Dragon, "the leaves will turn crimson and gold."

"Yeah," he nodded, "And the kids' brains will turn to Silly Putty and their stomachs will turn to something unspeakable. It's a malady that strikes every fall. It's never been known to be fatal, but it afflicts members of the younger generation who have to go back to school. I think it's called scholar's sacroiliac because it causes your backbone to desert you. It's often accompanied by student's somnambulism, a morbid inability to wake up in time for school."

"Surely you exaggerate," I demurred. Going back to school is an adventure. It's new clothes and an unmarked notebook. It's a fresh start—a time when you vow to learn from last year's mistakes and do everything right no matter what. It's an invitation to learn exciting new things. It's a challenge—a clarion call to explore unmarked paths on the journey to education."

"It's also," he interjected, "a gnawing suspicion that they'll have moved the bathroom during the summer and that you won't be able to find it when you need it. It's the sure and certain knowledge that your hated enemy will have the seat next to yours and he'll copy your homework and if you tell on him he'll twist your arm until you cry in front of the girl you wanted to impress.

"It's the fear that you'll get put in the class with the teacher everyone calls Rambo because she doesn't take any prisoners.

"It's knowing all the kids will laugh at you because your mother made you bring your lunch in the 'Tinkerbell' lunch box that used to belong to your sister, and because she bought your jeans at a discount store and everyone else will be wearing designer labels."

"You may be right," I admitted, "but surely that isn't all. You may be fortunate enough to get a new teacher—someone who doesn't know about all the rotten things you did last year. By the time some other teacher gets around to telling her, maybe you will have impressed her so much with your charm, wit, perfect attendance and intelligence that she won't believe them.

"Maybe this will be the year you're elected class president, and you get to be a cheerleader and homecoming queen and you'll be a soccer star, and you'll be so popular that everyone else will want the same brand jeans as you."

"Sure," the Dragon agreed. "and maybe Cheryl Tieg really buys all her clothes at Sears. Get real."

I sighed. "You really are a terrible pessimist."

He looked at me curiously. "What I can't understand is why you're such an optimist. You told me that the first day you went to school a dog bit you. The second day you got lost trying to find your way back from the bathroom and wound up in the boiler room, crying. The third day you had hysterics because some second grader told you there wasn't any Santa Claus.

"Why do you keep expecting something good to happen?"

"Because," I told him, "I never did get a teacher named Rambo. I had one nun that they used to call Frankenstein, but that was just because she had a bump on one side of her face and she was a tad clumsy and she kept knocking things down.

"And I never was a cheerleader or a homecoming queen or a soccer star, but I wasn't all that bad at softball. And I was in the drill team and the dramatic society and the photography club.

"And," I concluded triumphantly, "I got to be class president three times."

The Dragon thought for a minute. "Okay," he finally said, "you've convinced me. Maybe going back to school doesn't have to be all that bad. As a matter of fact, I never had a teacher named Rambo either. And most of the answers my hated enemy copied from my homework weren't right, anyway. And after he twisted my arm, the girl I wanted to impress told me she couldn't stand bullies, and she favored sensitive types like me.

"Come to think of it, going back to school is a chance for a whole new experience."

"Then you'll tell the kids what a wonderful opportunity it is? I urged him.

He looked startled. "Heck with the kids. This sounds like fun. Where's my 'Tinkerbell' lunch box?"

Trask Tackle sponsors month-long blues tournament

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Trask Tackle Co. has a sure-fire way to get rid of the blues.

The Cohasset-based company is sponsoring its first Bigfish Bluefish Tournament. The tournament officially began Aug. 1 at noon and will conclude Sept. 1 at noon.

As co-owner Mark Trask explained, "pound for pound, the bluefish is one of the finest small game fish, if not the finest in this area. It attacks bait and lures with a viciousness."

Trask noted, "the blues in this area leap out of the water and tail walk. And they have a serious set of teeth. Their nickname is 'choppers.' "

The blue, he noted, is not considered prime table fare. But, if cleaned and dressed out and iced quickly, the blue can be prepared in a variety of ways including barbequed, baked or broiled. "It's more in line with a mackerel.It's an oilierfish than most fish we eat in this area," Trask explained.

The tournament was specifically scheduled for late summer, Trask said, because this is the best time for the sportsman to find the blue.

"Generally the blue is found in June and July. This year it was even earlier. But this is the time when the activity for fishing peaks. They are feeding voraciously now. They're really aggressive because the bait is low."

The blue is a favorite catch of the sports fisherman.

"It's because of the fight," Trask said. "They can strip the line right off the reel. They are really a wild fish. They can drive schools of pogies and sperlings into the shore as they feed on them. Many people in this area have observed the bluefish blitz."

The Trask Tackle tournament is open to "anybody who likes to fish for blues from a boat or on shore. The blues can be caught anywhere."

The rules of the tournament specify the fish must be caught on a rod and reel. Registration forms for the tournament are available on local charter boats, at Trask Tackle shop, 827 Route 3A on the Cohasset/Scituate border, and at the Cohasset recreation department.

The forms must be completed and brought to Trask Tackle for official entry into the month-long competition.

All entries are eligible for Bigfish honors as well as weekly prizes and trophies. The official weigh station is located at the shop where all entries will be weighed Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday, 6 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Sunday, 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. To qualify for tournament competition, the fish must be weighed at Trask Tackle Co., so that all measurements are equal.

There are four mini-tournaments within the one Bigfish competition. The weekly tournaments will be from Aug. 1 through Aug. 9; Aug. 10 through Aug. 16; Aug. 17 through Aug. 23; and Aug. 24 through Sept. 1. Prizes will be awarded weekly.

The Bigfish grand prize will be awarded Sept. 1. First place will be a trophy cup and a $100 gift certificate.

Trask described the Bigfish contest as a competition for the largest fish. "It is not a quantitative contest," he said. "We don't care about the number of fish caught, but the size of the fish. The fish will be measured by length, weight, and girth."

The weight and girth of the fish will be multiplied by the length of the blue. For instance, a 30.5 lb. fish is multiplied by the length of 18 inches, multiplied by the girth of 19.25 for a total of 10,568. 25 points.

Weekly prizes for the four largest fish will be awarded for the fish caught in the respective week only. All fish are eligible for the grand prize Bigfish contest.

"This is a first-time tourney for us," Trask explained. "We're hoping for a big turnout. It adds some type of organized, competitive atmosphere to the whole business of catching fish. It adds a sense of purpose to the sport.

"The contest is open to anybody," he continued. "Anybody who likes to fish for blues is welcome to participate. The fish can be caught anywhere, on shore or on a boat."

For more information on the Trask Tackle Company Bigfish Tournament, contact the shop at 383-0061.

Bluefish Derby begins Aug. 22

Adams Bait & Tackle will sponsor the South Shore Bluefish Derby with over $1,000.00 in cash and prizes. Beginning at 6 a.m. Friday, Aug. 22, and continuing until 4 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 24, anglers will fish local waters contesting for top awards.

The derby is open to all anglers who can fish from boat or shore anywhere in Massachusetts waters.

A $500 cash prize will be awarded to the angler weighing in the heaviest bluefish. A cash bonus will be awarded to the registered angler weighing in the heavist bluefish over 20 pounds. Only bluefish will be eligible species. All fish must be weighed in at Adams Bait & Tackle.

The entry fee is $10 and all money will be used to support Pembroke's "Teach a Kid to Fish" program.

Junior anglers under 13 years of age can register for the Junior Division. Merchandise prizes will be awarded in this division. Juniors will not be eligible for awards in the adult division unless they are also registered in the adult division.

Registration forms are available at Adams Bait & Tackle, Route 139 in Pembroke. Registration deadline will be Thursday, Aug. 21, at 9 p.m. Call 826-8341 for further information.

Audubon Society program

The South Shore Sanctuaries of the Mass. Audubon Society will sponsor a program on the ways of the six-footed from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the headquarters at 2000 Main St., Marshfield.

This is a great program for kids and their parents. Cost is $6 for members, and $8, non-members.

On Aug. 21 from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m., there will be a rod, reel and research program. The group will be sampling the pond at Webster Farm and the Green Harbor River for fish. Call and sign on as part of a fish research team.

'Witches of Eastwick' curiosity prompted this sermon

(William John Hutchinson was asked to present a serm n last Sunday to the members of the Second Parish of Hingham. His talk entitled, "A Look at Witchcraft" is as follows. Ed)

When I was first asked to conduct today's service one story recurring in the media was the debate concerning the filming of The Witches of Eastwick. This excited my curiosity and I decided to take a look at witchcraft, a subject about which I had no more idea than the man in the moon as to how it would be made relevant to a contemporary religious service. I will comment further on this dilemma, but first a look at the early origins of witchcraft.

The Bible mentions witches or witchcraft eight times in the old testiment and only once in the New Testament when it is listed as one of the works of the flesh in the 20th verse of the 5th chapter of Galatians.

What is a witch? What does a witch do? Witches were found in ancient days in Assyria and what they did has been the basis of folkway beliefs and superstitions ever since throughout much of the Western world. A witch originally was an individuals who used some or all of the following techniques to influence events. Like believers in voodoo, a form of witchcraft, believers in witchcraft were in fact strongly effected by acts of witches for the same psychosomatic reasons that lead to the success of voodoo curses.

Witches frequently used image magic—sticking pins into dolls or puppets that represent the intended victim.

They performed certain acts or mixed potions to cause love or hate.

They casted spells or invoked demons to make the victim crazy.

They pronounced curses against individuals, families or other groups.

They were blamed for poisonings and such illnesses as food poisoning.

They prepared charms.

They used prayers, church liturgy or religious implements for evil purposes—this was done at meetings such as the Black Mass, a concept which we will trace shortly.

They affected the weather by invoking demons.

They used metamorphosis to change demons to animals such as black cats or toads to assist the witch. These animals were called familiars. It was beleived that witches fed their own blood to familiars.

Witches also called demons to haunt houses.

Witches were often persons who killed babies or caused nursing mothers to have no milk.

Each witch had made a compact with the Devil.

These beliefs then existed from extremely ancient times and survived especially in more remote areas as we shall see.

Early in its history, the Roman Catholic Church in its canon episcopi had denied the existence of witches and specifically forbade their prosecution. This basically left any practitioners of the so called black arts alone until about the year 1230 when the Roman Church was faced with its so called Cathar or Albigensian heresy in the Pyrenees and the Waldensian heresy near Lyon and in the Alps. The Church in it's efforts to combat the heresies just mentioned, created the Dominican Order to lead the fight against the heretics and the Inquisition as the Order's primary tool. The Dominicans noticed that the mountain people had different practices which the Order labeled as witchcraft and they sought the authority of the Church to stamp it out. However, Pope Alexander IV, basing his decision on the canon episcopi said that any witch had to be proven to be a heretic and a witch for the death penalty to be executed.

In 1326 the Pope John XXII at Avignon, who was personally from Southern France allowed the full power of the inquisition to be used against witches. During the next hundred years the inquisition directed its efforts against the Alps and Pyrenees regions.

The Council of the Roman Catholic Church meeting at Basel, Switzerland in 1435 through 1437 lead to the publication of confessions of witches at Berne, Switerland in a book called Formicarius. This book started to spread the rural superstitions and beliefs into Germany where they had long since been previously forgotten.

The next major development was the publication of a tract by Jean Vineti, the Dominican Inquisitor of Carcassonne. In it he declared that witchcraft was a new heresy, not related to the old rural beliefs which the Church had long tolerated. He told of witches flying on broom sticks to meetings with the devil and celebrations of the Black Mass. This was his way of explaining the Waldensian and Albigensian church meetings and organizing public pressure against these groups. However, by identifying this witchcraft as totally different from that of previous times, the inquisitors got around their largest obstacle—the canon episcopi. Now witches were fair game for death, usually by burning at the stake.

'Our right to read and study freely and openly presents to public scrutiny off-the-wall unorthodox, unusual beliefs and these without fear of reprisal might possibly be the single most important fight that we have and we must protect it from any infringement.'

In 1484 Pope Innocent VIII issued a Bull deploring the spread of witchcraft into Germany and authorizing Dominican inquisitors Heinrich Institor Kramer and Jakob Sprenger to squash it.

Two years later these two issued Malleus Maleficarum which was a virtual handbook of how witches and the devil operate together to case maleficia or evil deeds of witchcraft. The ultimate conclusion of the book was that although the witch worked with the Devil, she did it knowingly and willingly and thus witchcraft is a crime of the witch herself.

This book had already been witten before the Bull which was inserted into the book to show to all Europe that witchcraft was offically recognized as spreading and that they had the authority of the Church to stamp it out.

Up to this point persecution and burning of witches was spasmodic, occasional, local event in the remote mountains. Now all the myths concerning witches and their behavior were gathered together in one source, circulated universally as truth by the Church and all other lay and secular authorities were called upon not only not to obstruct, but indeed to actively assist the inquisitors.

During the years that followed, the great witch-hunts occurred mostly in mountainous regions. Why?

In the Middle Ages feudalism was the basis of civilization. However, it was predicated on large tracts of cultivated land which sustained the manor and its supporting organization. In mountain regions, feudalism never really worked. This coupled with a lack of established, settled churches in these areas led to an isolation that permitted the development of a different culture in these regions. Religon tended to be more primitive and did not readily embrace the new orthodoxy, as I have mentioned in my previous two sermons.

Witchcraft persecutions continued at about the same pace until an eruption of great religious zeal which reached its height in the Reformation and Counter-Reformation during which the ultimate heresy, worshipping the Devil became a much greater target and led to possibly as many as one million witchcraft trails in Continental Europe.

Surprisingly, there were few trials in those areas where open religious warfare broke out. Maybe this was because the judicial systems were destroyed or made non-functional by the wars.

Now let's look at Britain. Britain has its folklore based in Druidism which stayed just barely under the surface at least to the time of the Norman conquest.

Here there were good or white witches and there were evil or black witches. Could this be the origin of the good guys wearing white hats and the bad guys wearing black hats in early Western Movies?

In England, torture, which was used in about half the continental witch cases, was strictly forbidden. There was no inquisition because there was no heretical group to oppose. The fear of witches primarily as individuals was never transferred to a group that flew to meetings with Satan. In England, when a witch was brought to trial she was charged with the specific crime that lead to her being called a witch, such as afflicting a neighbor with disease. She was not even thought in terms of belonging to any form of heresy.

In 1542 when Henry VIII had broken from Rome, the civil authorities took charge of the witchcraft situation. The parliament passed an act penalizing incantation, conjuring, witchcraft that kills, wastes or maims a person or destroys or impairs his goods and chattel and other similar offences. There is no mention of en masse demon worship which in fact doesn't appear in England until 1612. This law was refined and defined by Elizabeth I and made somewhat harsher by James I although one could argue that death was preferable to life in prison in those days and that in realty James was ultimately more humane.

In England, Anglicans, Romans and Puritans all supported the prosecution of witches as did the Presbyterians in Scotland. It should not be surprising that the citizens of North American were also men and women of their times. Hence, we find 198 accusations of witchcraft in New England before the reknown Salem Village cases of 1692 and 3. Among others there were cases in Hartford, CT in 1648, 1662 and 1663; NY state in 1665 and 1670; New Hampshire in 1675, 1682 and 3; Penn in 1684 and 1701; MA from 1642 to 1710; VA in 1706 and in French Quebec.

In 1692 and 3 there were 134 accused witches who at least had a hearing in MA. Forty from Salem, 38 from Andover, 7 from Lynn, 7 from Topsfield or Ipswich, 6 each from Billerica and Beverly, 4 from Reading, 3 each from Charlestown, Gloucester, Haverhill and Woburn; 2 each from Boxford and Marblehead, and 1 each from Amesbury, Chelmsford, Great Island, Malden, Rowely, Romney Marsh (now Revere), Salisbury, Wells (now in Maine) and Boston.

One who was accused was John Alden, son of the Pilgrim, who was a merchant in Boston who escaped before he was brought to trial. This flare-up was brought to a screeching halt when Governor Phipps' wife was accused.

It's interesting to note that Rev. Cotton Mather, who as you probably know was deeply involved in the activities at Salem, was extremely upset when he was passed over for the Presidency of Harvard University—a position held by his grandfather and father. One reason given was his involvement in the Salem witch cases. As a result of this failure to obtain the Presidency, Cotton Mather went to England and received financial support from Elihu Yale for a new college to be located at Clinton, CT, which would have Cotton Mather as its first President.

This then is a brief historical account of witchcraft. When I had made it this far in the preparation of this sermon, I still had to face the question— Gee, that's interesting, but so what? Who care's?

I think that there are conclusions to be drawn at two levels from this dissertation.

First as regards to witchcraft, itself—Eventhough many thinking, educated people now deny witchcraft as a viable system of beliefs, it still lurks near the surface in the form of so-called seers or prophets or astrologers, in the form of organized groups who still maintain the ancient Druid practices or who still practice the Black Mass, and in the form of superstitious folkways still maintained by many cultures throughout the world. To this day it remains rooted in the Doctrine of the Roman Church as can be seen from exorcisms still practiced by various Roman clergy.

Secondly, in the middle ages we saw that an institution in an effort to wipeout opposition to itself, discovered certain folkways or cultural beliefs which were used against those opponents and were later expanded by changing the rules to make thousands of innocent victims share the fate of the original targets. We almost saw a similar phenomena in the early 1950's of the Joe McCarthy era. We may ultimately be seeing a similar challenge from the Fundamentalist born-again Christians who have already determined that they oppose many beliefs which are acceptable and indeed desireable in the minds of many of us. They appear to seek censurship of books, libraries, text books, media and anywayelse that can keep you and me from enjoying our Constitutional rights to read and believe as we see fit. Last year I mentioned my problem of books which have disappeared from my local library. This still continues.

I hate to sound like a broken record, but our right to read and study freely and openly presents to public scrutiny off-the-wall, unorthodox, unusual beliefs and theses without fear of reprisal might possibly be the single most important right that we have and we must protect it from any infringement.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Commuter rail restoration: An update, Part I

(First of a series)

The study of the long proposed and much needed restoration of commuter railroad service in Southeastern Massachusetts is proceeding—bumping along as fast as these things go in the modern era. One can develop quite an affection for our ancestors when one reflects that the construction of the Harvard Square to Park Street section of the present Red Line took just two years and ten months between late 1909 and the inaugural run on March 23, 1912. That project, by the way, included the boring of a tunnel through ancient wells 100 feet under Beacon Hill and the construction of a station ("Park Street Under") beneath the existing and continuously operating Park Street Station.

Nowadays it will take us three to four times two years, ten months to implement the incomparably simpler plan for reestablishing service along surface rail rights-of-way, ones that need almost no modifications from the specifications they were built to between 1840 and 1870.

Nevertheless, it must be reported that the plan is proceeding nicely by, forgive me, constipated contemporary standards. Furthermore, not only is the plan proceeding, the plan as it is developing is generally, and with the exception of one major conceptual error, a good one.

That good progress is being made is due primarily to a long-standing butt of barbs in this space, the M.B.T.A. I just can't say enough about the M.B.T.A. staff working on this project, particularly Stephen Polechronis, the assistant project manager. He and his colleagues are highly intelligent, and what is more they are extremely gracious when, as happens week after week, they go from town to town presenting their developing ideas to local citizens including both the gracious and intelligent and, from time to time, the screaming and belligerent. If this project ever actually gets implemented, sometime around 1995 you and I, who will have waited a generation and a half for a train to ride, should raise a glass fondly to those who at the present juncture are out on the front line taking on the screamers in an effort to build us something good.

A few major points need to be made to help clarify the status of the project for the reader who may support the concept but does not have the time to sort out the intricacies of the decisions that will need to be made. The first point is that while according to its legislative mandate the M.B.T.A. is required to study a variety of scenaria as though they all were legitimate proposals, most of them are fundamentally flawed and must, when decision time comes, be rejected. Herewith some rejectables. . . .

The "no build," i.e. do nothing option (which is being studied as fastidiously as every other option) is no option, for not to rebuild the railroad would be to allow our transportation, our economy, our environment, and our quality of life to worsen for the rest of the days of our lives. The real alternative to the relatively modest $200 to $300 million proposal to rebuild the railroad is a $2 to $3 billion ten to twelve lane highway from Boston to Braintree, thence toward the Sagamore Bridge via Rte. 3 and toward the Bourne Bridge via Rte. 24. Such a highway would indeed keep traffic moving, but the problems it would create at its end points, at its interchanges, and on the rest of our roads would be massive.

Secondly, the proposal to put rail or monorail down the Rte. 3 centerstrip is not viable. Such a plan would give no relief to the inland, Rte. 24-centered communities; nor would it do much for the coastal towns of Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate. It would also be much more costly than refurbishing the existing rail rights of way. But the biggest reason centerstrip rail or monorail would be a disaster is that stations would have to be sited at exits where east-west roads intersect with Rte. 3. As we all know, these intersections are cancers of congestion as they are, and to add major public transportation facilities to them would make them so much the more hellish. (In cities like Chicago, where transit lines were sited in the centerstrip of the Dan Ryan and John F. Kennedy Expressways, access to the transit does not primarily depend on the interchanges that feed the expressways.)

Thirdly, the proposal to terminate commuter rail in Braintree and require its clientele to transfer to the Red Line is unworkable. The Red Line is loaded to the gunwhales as it is, and what is more, the passenger who has boarded at, say, Greenbush, waited while his commuter train made stops at Scituate, Egypt, North Scituate, Cohasset, North Cohasset, Hingham Square, West Hingham, East Weymouth, Weymouth Heights, Weymouth Landing, and East Braintree, is not going to want to get off his train, wait, and transfer to a Red Line train that will stop nine more times before getting him to Park Street in Boston. The same is true of the passenger who has boarded in Middleborough, Brockton, or Plymouth.

There is only one concept that will work in a way that will attract the busy commuter and therefore relieve Rtes. 3, 3-a, and 24 of their enormous, time-consuming, air-polluting, and economically costly daily burden. That is a commuter rail system running over the presently fallow rail rights-of-way, one that picks up passengers in local downtowns or in selected magnet stations near major roads such as Rte. 3-a, and once reaching the Braintree terminus of the Red Line, expresses passengers directly to South Station. A system that terminates in Braintree and requires a transfer to the Red Line simply won't be improvement enough to get many automobile commuters out of their cars. Such a plan would not be worth spending $200 million on.

Fortunately, state planners are seriously studying extending service all the way to Boston, and if I hear them right, seem to be moving toward recommending it. Under this plan the Greenbush commuter will have about a 30-minute ride while his train makes about ten local stops along the South Shore. Then, once his train reaches Braintree, he will simply stay in his seat while his train whisks him to Boston in about ten minutes. That, neighbors, is the plan that you can bet $200 million on!

There is, however, one aspect of this plan as the state is now working it up that is fundamentally wrong. (In reporting the direction that planners seem to be moving in, I must remind you that no actual decisions have been made, and all possible plans, including the lousy ones, remain on the table.) The mistake that is probably going to be made concerns the point in Braintree where the Greenbush, Plymouth, and Middleborough rights-of-way converge and meet the Red Line terminus.

According to present thinking, if commuter rail terminates there in Braintree (the plan I do not favor), there will be a "common station" where rail commuters will disembark and transfer to the Red Line. But on the other hand, if the plan (which I favor) extending commuter rail into Boston is adopted, the "common station" in Braintree would be eliminated. Thus, after leaving East Braintree, South Weymouth, or Holbrook (depending on the line) trains would bypass the Red Line terminus altogether . . . and that would be a mistake.

It would be a mistake because while essentially commuter rail will serve suburbanites commuting to Boston proper, there will be plenty of people with destinations shy of Boston proper—and we want to get them off the highway too. For the passenger going to Quincy Center to shop, or to State Street South in North Quincy to work, or to UMass Boston to get book learning, the commuter rail system must offer the option of a transfer to the Red Line before expressing to South Station. Or, as I explained it to Gov.-elect Dukakis in a 1974 study (fortunatley I kept my copy):

"The common stations, those which will link the rapid transit lines that will run to Route 128 with the passenger trains that will run beyond Route 128, are crucial to making the idea work. The two systems must be linked in order to feed each other and in order to provide passengers with the flexibility they need if they are to be persuaded to give up that infinitely flexible mode of transportation, the automobile. Passengers who have boarded in the 128-495 belt who are bound for intermediate points short of downtown Boston, points which are likely to be locations of developing job opportunities (State Street South in North Quincy, for example) must have the opportunity to switch to rapid transit at Route 128. Without joint railroad-rapid transit stations at Route 128, such a passenger would have to ride all the way into Boston, then switch to rapid transit, and literally backtrack to his destination. That individual will ride the expressway in his car, you can bet on it."

My thinking on this, as on so many matters, hasn't changed since 1974: the common station at the terminus of the Red Line is a vital component in making the new system flexible and attractive to the public. There is some fear by planners that a common station would result in the Braintree terminus being overburdened with commuter rail passengers. That problem can easily be obviated by preventing northbound commuter trains from taking on passengers in Braintree. The train out of Greenbush, Plymouth, or Middleborough would stop in Braintree to discharge passengers transferring to the Red Line. But it would not take on more passengers; therefore no one would be attracted to Braintree Station to board a Boston-bound commuter train.

It is inevitable that in commenting on an issue as large and complex as this the reporter focuses on a few areas of disagreement, not the larger part of the whole with which he has no quarrel. I do want to stress that our planners are doing a good piece of work for you and me. With our help maybe it will be one we can all be proud to bequeath to our descendents.

Next week I will deal with the sharp public criticism of the project that has emerged in Hingham and Quincy; and with other matters pertaining to the project.

Elder Services area meeting set for Aug. 28

South Shore Elder Services, Inc., an elderly planning and social service agency, will hold a public hearing Aug. 28, 1986, on the agency's plans for 1987.

The hearing will be held 10 a.m., at the South Shore Elder Services, Inc., 639 Granite St., Braintree. The purpose of the hearing is to give the public, and older people in particular, an opportunity to express their opinions on programs and services for South Shore senior citizens.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

Pet Peeves

To those of you whose dogs recently dropped off samples on my lawn, my apologies for the tardiness of this report. I can only say that my vacation coupled with a seasonal surge in the area's population has resulted in a mountainous backlog of test samples.

Yesterday, however, I pulled out the mower and conducted the analysis you've been so patiently awaiting.

On the whole, I'm happy to report, the dog population of the South Shore appears healthy and well fed. The virus we had witnessed in early spring has clearly passed, and judging by the close proximity of test groupings there is no indication of anti-social behavior between the different sub-species.

On a less upbeat note, intelligence scores are on the decline. I observed on at least four separate occasions during a test period that an average of three dogs were required to outwit the snap-down lids on my garbage cans. In prior tests, a team of two dogs could accomplish the same task while scattering my trash over a much wider area.

As always, I urge each of you to have your dog leave his or her address when dropping off a sample so that I can return it to you for your own personal inspection.

In my next report, I'll discuss the various brands of beer that appear to be gaining in popularity with your teenagers.

Pilgrim Hearing

Legislators misinformed about nuclear accidents

Letters

To the Editor:

Zoos sicken me, and so did the public hearings conducted July 28 and 30 by the Energy Committee of the Massachusetts Legislature in the State House.

Only the anti-nuke crowd got much notice of the first meeting, hence the legislators got to hear what they wanted to hear, and what they wanted the media to pick up and disseminate. Objective, informed and competent professionals were conspicuous by their absence.

Also, the legislators clearly knew nothing much about the subjects—nuclear accidents and emergency planning zones for the first session, and the effects of radiation on health for the second session, except they seemed to have been reading some of the trash material put out by the peculiar anti-nuke groups.

Hence they were not equipped to know the difference, if they cared to, between testimony from incompetents and from qualified people.

Worse, they tried hard to put words in the mouth of the witness from the Department of Public Health. At the second hearing, on effects of radiation, several competent experts did testify, and I think Senator Golden, at least, may have had his mind pried open a bit on the subject.

But it's hard to tell whether they learned anything, or care to read some of the quality texts on the subject. The temptation to posture as a defender of the public must be irresistable for a politician.

Possibly the most disgusting feature of the proceedings was the parade of legislators braying their positions for the TV cameras—a standard beginning for any public hearing. In this case, they demonstrated such abysmal ignorance as to cause some mutterings by the journalists I was near.

Not one witness nor legislator seemed to comprehend the profound effect of distance, dilution and dispersion on the consequences of an accident, whether it is a leak of chlorine from a railroad tank car accident or a release of radiation. The exposure at 200 feet obviously is quite different than at two miles.

True, radiation monitoring devices are so sensitive that any slight increase above background, many miles away, can be detected. But so what.

As demonstrated by Chernobyl, and by the exhaustive analyses of the scientific community since Three Mile Island, even with an uncontained release, the levels are high only within a few miles of the plant.

The curve of radiation vs distance is asymtotic. It flattens out to a low level which then remains low for great distances. Too low to matter, as Europeans now realize and the furor over banning vegatables and dairy products has been put in perspective.

The first hearing was on a bill to increase the emergency planning zone to a 40 mile radius—about as pointless an idea as one could conceive, although it is one of those things that look great on a superficial look, and looks almost obviously right.

But it's not only unbearably costly, almost certain to be misused to block the use of nuclear electricity, but it is counterproductive to safety.

If ever there is an accident justifying evacuation because somehow the containment leaked, then there could be a real advantage in brisk evacuation, using a preplanned program, within two or three miles of the plant.

These people should not be blocked by the needless movement on the roads of everybody for miles around. Even within two miles, many scientists hold the personal opinion that they would rather stay inside a few hours than go out in the traffic.

One big advantage of water reactors is that the water systems tend to retain the highly soluble fission products and scrub out aerosol-like insolubles, so that most of the hazard turns out to be the noble gases, whose activity fortunately is very short lived.

Senator William Golden's 40 mile idea reminds me of a kid playing with matches. A nice kid, but the matches may do some harm. Let's hope he learns enough to put them away, and come up with something that isn't so counterproductive to the public interest.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

Mid-summer report from the heartland

Having recently returned from my annual summer's pilgrimmage visiting my parents in Ohio, I offer the following for the edification of those many New Englanders lacking either contacts or experience in our nation's heartland.

Though many of us have wandered extensively in the southern or western United States, and others have traveled the continents, few New Englanders know the culture of Omaha or Indianapolis, let alone the quiet villages surrounding them. The exceptions are born mid-westerners who are transplanted to these rockbound shores.

These people form a secret society, recognizing each other by their determined pronunciation of the letter r. Former mid-westerners are excused from reading the remainder of this column.

My parents live in Walbridge, Ohio, which calls itself "The Town on the Right Side of the Tracks," and is a few miles southeast of Toledo. It's sobriquet derives from the Cheasepeake and Ohio installation which dominates its western landscape.

First of all, the weather has been perfect for the crops. Lots of spring rain and hot, humid summer. Unfortunately the government is paying more farmers than ever before to let their fields grow fallen. So along with the healthy corn and wheat, Ohio has a bumper crop of weeds.

There's a new shop on Main Street, "Tri-County Satellite." They sell satellite discs. Cable television hasn't taken over yet and rural reception has never been great. A number of farms have discs in the yard, next to the John Deere.

On my way back from Napolean, Ohio visiting a friend from high school, I drove north on Interstate 75 toward Bowling Green one night around midnight.

All was dark except the occasional gas station. Then I saw the most incredible building, glowing with reflected light.

It was a beautiful new building of architecture I had seen before but never in Ohio: swirling, pointed domes and tall, stately towers. It was a large mosque.

How interesting that an Islamic community had asserted itself so emphatically in the midst of all those Lutherans.

It was near Findlay, Ohio, headquarters of Marathon Oil Company. Was there an oil connection here, or was I stereotyping?

I also visited my friend the Cleveland Indians fan. Just when I was beginning to think they were becoming as rare as collectors of trolley tokens, the Indian's fans find themselves a young, winning team that gives hope for the future.

Ironically, Indian fans are taking more pleasure with their team six games behind than Boston fans are with the Sox in first place. History is a burden.

One day I amused myself while riding to a mall, probably twenty miles round trip, by counting the number of foreign cars. Here is how I counted: "one."

Ohio has far fewer foreign cars than five years ago, partly because of the recent oil glut, but also because Novas and Escorts compete more favorably with imports.

That doesn't mean the industrial or agricultural midwest is out of its depression. I think it means rather that, like England, it is getting used to being in a permanent depression, and has come to see this depression as normal.

Property values are so low compared to ours that an Ohio family could move here only at great sacrifice. A South Shore family suddenly transplanted to Ohio could buy so much house they'd feel socially embarrassed.

The only thing that really drove me crazy this trip, besides the annoying politeness of Ohio drivers, was the lack of information. I read the local weekly, the Toledo Blade, the two Detroit papers, scanned the radio for news and talk and watched television.

I found plenty of baseball news, a bit of local scandal and, even though I tried to avoid it, more than I wanted to know about both the royal and the Kennedy weddings.

But I sure couldn't find much about South Africa, or Central America, or the Middle East. The average South Shore resident picks up more world news by accident than the average Ohioan gets by looking for it.

This makes the general consciousness different. Walbridge is very peaceful. Toledo seems untouched by the world upheavals that Boston keeps calling to our attention.

Yet they experience the same problems we do. Their kids are gong to hell and the schools are given impossible tasks.

And the local nuclear reactor is shut down. There was a meeting of citizens with officials. They discussed safety and evacuation. The citizens were farmers, many of them retired. They were angry and outraged at their powerlessness.

In some ways the midwest isn't so different.

Free transit service to South Shore Hospital

Beginning Aug. 1, South Shore Hospital will begin providing free transportation to patients livings in the towns of Weymouth, Braintree, Hingham, Cohasset, Hanover, Holbrook, Abington, Hanson, Hull, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman.

The trial program, called the South Shore Hospital Courtesy Coach, will be offered until at least Sept. 17. It is designed to help area residents who have difficulty obtaining transportation for appointments or treatments at the hospital.

Donald P. Fraser, community relations, said that residents of six communities using the service find it very valuable. "We hope that expansion of Courtesy Coach service to an additional nine South Shore towns will help even more people, particularly the elderly and handicapped."

The free van service is being sponsored by the hospital auxiliary, the Friends of South Hospital, Inc. and South Shore Coordinated Transportation, Inc. (SCOOT) of Braintree. The Friends have funded free transportation for a 90-day trial period which began June 17.

The Courtesy Coach van is equipped to carry two wheelchair patients and six others.

Rates and schedules are determined by daily patient needs. The van runs on weekdays from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Fraser said that it is preferred that patients make reservations 48 hours in advance by calling 337-4585.

If the trial program is successful, free or subsidized transportation may be continued to the hospital, Fraser said.

Warner Bros. rep. a 'nice friend' to Cohasset

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

"We'll see you at the movies."

With that familiar signature, Warner Brothers bid farewell to Cohasset this week - to its residents, its businesses and the people who made the filming of "The Witches of Eastwick" possible.

The Chamber of Commerce, spearheaded by president Wayne Sawchuk, commemorated the summer-long association with Hollywood by honoring its location manager, Sam Mercer.

Known to several of the local businessmen, Mercer was the prime force behind the filming of "Witches" in Cohasset. A Massachusetts' native son, Mercer scouted the New England area since January and was responsible for touting this community to the film's director, producer and artistic designer.

Monday night at Hugo's, the local Chamber members paid tribute to Mercer for his diligence throughout the past six months and the friendships he formed with Cohasset's residents, shopkeepers and town officials.

"I think we found a nice friend in Sam Mercer," Sawchuk said at Monday night's gala event. "He's been in Cohasset for many months and got to know many of the businessmen and most of the community. He's worked closely with town department heads and store owners with traffic control and a lot of other problems. He's been a symbol of Warner Brothers in Cohasset."

Looking around to the 100 guests attending Monday night's tribute, Sawchuk envisioned "at least one unique story that everyone here could share about the movie. It's been the highlight of our summer - seeing major movie stars up close. It's been a great experience to see just how much goes into making a movie. It's an incredible situation, to watch hours of rehearsing and shooting that will probably end up to be a minute in the movie."

Mercer, who brought along several family members including his wife, Darlene, was grateful for the honor Monday night and the friendships he formed while working in the town.

"I've been in and out of Cohasset since April," he said. "And I've enjoyed everyone I've met here. They are the ones who have made this movie successful. From the governor, the Chamber, the shopkeepers, the extras, to the people who have come each day to watch the filming - this has been a community project."

Cohasset Chamber of Commerce members paid a special tribute to Warner Brothers Location Manager Sam Mercer Monday night. Mercer was presented two special hats to remind him forever of the summer's events.

$$$ dust settles in 'Witches' wake

By Valerie Kroon
Mariner Correspondent

The "Witches of Eastwick" has come and gone from Cohasset Village and, for the most part, activity in the village is pretty much back to normal.

"Witches" tee shirts still hang in the fronts of some shops or are displayed in windows, but that appears the only trace of the hustle and bustle of activity that followed film crews and cast to Cohasset two weeks ago.

For the short time Cohasset Village was converted to Eastwick, some businesses sold merchandise, cold drinks and chocolates. Others, selling real estate, gasoline, or banking services were adversely affected. And the "Witches of Eastwick" is still drawing tourists to this small seaside community even after the film crews and cast have departed.

The general consensus among business owners, employees, and shoppers is that if people had to come to the village on specific business they may have felt inconvenienced by the street closing and the need to park some distance away.

But those who came down to view a part of the action, and most shop owners, found the filming to

Anti-hazing school policy adopted

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In a busy Monday night session, the Cohasset School Committee adopted an anti-hazing policy, continued plans to begin an after-school day-care program, hired a new assistant high school principal and accepted a $1,000 gift of school supplies from Warner Brothers.

After an incident in Lowell last year, the state enacted a law prohibiting methods of initiation into student organizations which would willfully or recklessly endanger the physical or mental health of any student or other person.

Superintendent Eugene Crowell explained the state law requires schools to inform students and organizations which use school facilities of the new law.

Mary Ellen Gallagher, Cohasset High School's new principal, has prepared tear-sheets outlining the new law. Those sheets will be included within the student handbook.

"Home room will be extended on opening day," Gallagher said, "so teachers can review the school policy with students."

She added, "Seventh graders will come in for an additional orientation day and will get a more in-depth review of school policies at that time."

While the Cohasset School Committee agreed to publish the new state policy, it did not set its own guidelines for the punishment of such incidents, according to Crowell.

He explained the committee would review and evaluate the actions taken by the school administration regarding cases of hazing; in general such incidents would be handed over to higher authorities for action.

The law states, "Whoever is a principal organizer or participant in the crime of hazing shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment in a house of correction for not more than 100 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Furthermore, failure to report such a crime is punishable by a fine of not more than $500.

Crowell said he doesn't believe hazing is a problem at Cohasset High School.

In other action, the School Committee voted to Jack makes her lose her cool

By Claire McDonough
Mariner Correspondent

She won't let her name be used and I had to promise to go to jail rather than reveal my sources, but this is a true story.

A Scituate resident sought relief from the heat last week by buying an ice cream cone in a Cohasset establishment.

She gave her order and took a $10 bill out of her purse. As the waitress handed her her change, our heroine suddenly realized that the man standing next to her was actor Jack Nicholson.

Overcome by awe and confusion, she felt her face redden and realized that her tongue was not functioning properly. She snatched up her change and ran out to her car, mentally planning phone calls to all her friends. She had, after all, stood next to a movie star.

As she opened her car door, it occurred to her that she was holding her change but no ice cream.

By this time she was close to incoherent, but she bravely reentered the store and confronted her waitress.

"I have my change," she stated, "but I don't have my ice cream. You didn't give me my ice cream cone."

Nicholson turned and touched her arm sympathetically.

"Yes she did," the actor said helpfully. "It's in your purse."

Cohasset's week . . .

Cohasset highway resurfacing

Depending on the weather the Highway Department will be resurfacing during the week of Aug. 25. Jerusalem Road from Atlantic Ave. to Forest Ave. and North Main St. from Forest Ave. to Hingham town line. Some detours and inconvience will have to be endured.

Fire chief proposes fees

Fire Chief Daniel Brock proposed selectmen set a fee structure for the numerous permits issued by the fire department. Before any decision is made, however, selectmen asked to see a comparable list of permit fees from neighboring towns.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle made his feelings clear at Monday night's meeting, "this list is ridiculous," he said to the chief. "Every time you turn around, the taxpayers of this town are asked to pay more money. They're paying for the fire department, who's doing a good job, but you're not going to charge the public for this."

Chief Brock suggested a $10 permit fee be charged by the department for various inspections, including inspections of smoke detectors (that fee is currently the only one in place), oil burners, blasting and storage of ammunition. A $25 fee, as allowed by state law, would be charged to issue a fireworks permit.

A $10 fee would also be charged for inspection of nursing homes, inns, gasoline stations, occupancy units within a residential building and review of construction plans.

Chief Brock also recommended the ambulance fee be hiked to $100 per trip, and that the patient be charged $5 per mile.

The chief explained the reason for the fees, saying the department is making more inspections and issuing more permits than ever before. The fee schedule he recommended follows state guidelines.

Laugelle told the chief he also opposed charging for an ambulance trip. Persons now requesting use of the town's ambulance are charged $75. "They're paying enough taxes," Laugelle said. "There's no reason the public should be charged, and now you're trying to double the fee. It's ridiculous."

Selectman Cliff Mitman said he would like to see a more detailed list, comparing the proposed charges with those of other similarly-sized towns including Norwell, Hull, Hingham and Scituate.

Surf sewage shuts beaches

Cohasset's coastline was besieged by bacteria last week.

Health agent Joseph Godzik shut down Sandy and Black Rock beaches Wednesday and half of Thursday, after tests showed the water was thick with sewage.

Godzik explained, fecal coliform counts which usually number less than 10 bacteria per milliliter of water, ballooned to 1450 at Sandy Beach and 1860 at Black Rock Beach.

"The water was first tested Monday," he said, "and we had to wait 24 hours for the results; by the time we got them Tuesday, it was too late to do anything."

He added, "I retested the water Wednesday, and the counts all came back low."

Godzik said he presumed the weekend deluge triggered a discharge of raw sewage at a sewage treatment plant somewhere north of town.

"There doesn't seem to be any source in Cohasset for this," he said. "My guess is that it came from the Nut Island plant in Quincy because it appears the source is from the north. The results indicated that the flow was running from north to south."

"The harbor was closed down three or four years ago," Godzik recalled, "but those beaches have never been closed before, that I can remember."

Tests performed late the previous week by Hingham Health Agent Samuel Bosco revealed nothing unusual at North Beach, according to Secretary Marie Manchester.

A defeat for fishermen

Congressman Gerry Studds reported this week the House defeated (241-181) a bill he had cosponsored to help resolve the insurance and safety problems faced by fishermen throughout the United States.

"I was deeply disappointed by the vote, because I do not believe the merits of the legislation were clearly or fairly evaluated by many members of the House who voted against the bill," said Studds.

The legislation designed was to improve the ability of commercial fishermen to obtain adequate insurance at an affordable price, something that they have been increasingly unable to do.

Authority local plan needed

The deadline is approaching for community input into the development of emergency case plans by local housing authorities.

The plans are needed under new regulations of the state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD).

Those regulations, which set new standards for tenant selection by local housing authorities, go into effect in October.

Under the regulations, each local housing authority must, before October, develop a plan for approving granting emergency case status to eligible persons.

The plan must consider the needs of persons who are homeless, in abusive situations, or encountering severe medical emergencies.

Housing authorities are required to conduct an "open process of discussion" with local tenant groups and other members of the community, before adopting the emergency case plan.

Community members must have the chance to submit written and oral comments before the plan is adopted.

Although the plans are not due at the state level till EOCH until September, some authorities may send them in early, before comments are received.

Community input may make the difference in terms of recognizing the needs of the frail, sick, homeless, or abuse victims.

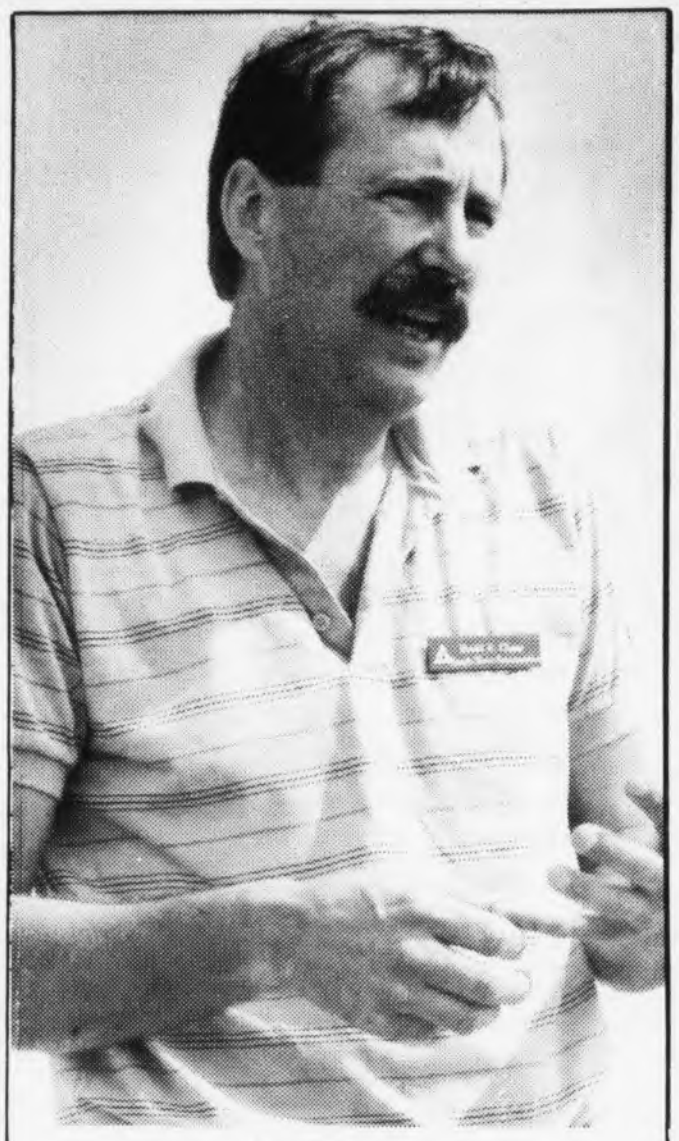
Audubon rep urges protection of coastline



David Clapp

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Waves of development are crashing along the South Shore and threatening the desirable vistas of coastal Cohasset, according to David Clapp of the Audubon Society.

While touring the water's edge here with the Cohasset Garden Club last week, he urged residents to batten down and prepare to preserve the town's remaining open spaces.

He explained, private development is diminishing general access by the town's average citizens to the "views and the sense that you get in a place like this," the reasons why many have chosen to call Cohasset home.

Clapp recommended concerned citizens should get active within Town government and press for public acquisition and protection of undeveloped parcels.

The group first stopped at Cohasset Harbor.

"In a little bay like this," he said, "the fine materials carried by the salt water in storms, settles and creates smooth, extensive mud flats, which are exposed at low tide.

"It's an active area for wildlife," he added. "Shore birds feed out there; herons, ibis and gulls utilize it and lots of ducks will come into this area in the fall and stay into the winter."

Clapp said the site, because of its wildlife activity and scenic beauty, falls under several state and federal laws concerning development along the coastal edge.

"It's an area that, for many reasons, is one that citizens could take an interest in," he commented.

"The development of an open space and recreation plan in the community and the continual updating of that plan," he said, "are important tools nowadays in being able to acquire land."

He explained, "The state has self-help funds, which are likely to give 50 percent and possibly as much as 80 percent reimbursement on land acquisitions.

"But you have to work on an open space plan," he said, "and the land has to be earmarked in the plan as something important to you. You have to stay with it."

Clapp said such a plan, and the expenses that go with it would be "important investments against haphazard or indifferent development.

"It would be a protection," he added, "that would enhance the process of development and the maintainance of residential areas in the future. It's fairly cheap insurance from that point of view."

Several towns on the South Shore and at the western end of Cape Cod have done open space and recreation planning over the last few years, Clapp said.

"Marshfield upgraded its plan, and ended up with more than a million dollars in state funds last year to help with watershed protection and buying up land," he added.

"The town of Mashpee did much the same thing, and the town of Duxbury last year upgraded its open space plan and then voted more than $3 million at Town Meeting without any state payback, to acquire control of about 175 acres and ownership of about 130 acres."

Clapp pointed out, the projects the state has funded most extensively under this program over the last two years have all been acquifer protection projects.

He explained, the state has been involved with both watershed protection as well as open space conservation.

Private conservation trust proposal discussed

"That combination," he said, "has been the main thrust in protection of the state's self-help fund."

John Hubbard of Beach Street commented, "One way to avoid problems of the Town owning property through the Conservation Commission is to go the route of a private conservation trust."

He explained, "The Cohasset Conservation Trust already happens to own much of the land in back of the beach along the harbor.

"We have complete control over what is done there," he added. "We do allow public access, though it's not the easiest place to get to.

"It's just an example of another vehicle other than the town government, as a means of acquiring and preserving property."

Clapp agreed, "There are several private land trusts or private organizations that are capable of doing that in the eastern part of the state."

But he argued, "One of the problems with private land trusts is, they have no way of getting state reimbursement.

"Since the price of land has escalated disproportionate to the amount of income most people are realizing," he added, "it's more and more difficult for the land trusts to come up with a lump sum."

The group next moved to Sandy Beach.

Clapp explained, Sandy Beach is typical of places that accumulate sand along New England's Rocky coastline.

"When you get an area that's cut-in," he said, "water runs between the rocks and becomes less turbulent, causing sand to settle out and drop to the ground."

He added, "The sand is then blown into land by storms. This type of area is subject to a lot of change during the year."

Clapp said, winter and summer storms affect the beach drastically, shifting sand in and out. In the winter, much of the sand is blown away and the stones underneath remain.

In the summer, the gentler breezes build sandbars and rebuild the beach.

Clapp explained, there has been a great increase in the size of sand dunes here over the past five or six years, as the beach recovers from the "tremendous impact" of the 1978 blizzard.

He stressed, the best way to preserve Sandy Beach is to leave it alone.

He explained, "One thing the D.P.W. should make sure of, is that nothing is ever removed from a beach like this; you could lose the beach."

The Cohasset Garden Club was further startled to learn that residents along Little Harbor will one day look out their back doors into a forest.

"As sand blasts across the road and settles into Little Harbor," Clapp said, "the harbor is filling in from the bottom up remarkably fast."

He explained, the natural progression over a period of centuries is that the harbor will fill in and become first a salt marsh, then a wet and grassy meadow and finally, a forest of small bushes and trees.

"If we could come back in 1000 years," he said, "this might be a typical area of young New England forest."

Next, the group mosied up the road to the stony surf of Pleasant Beach.

Clapp explained, while developers can meet regulations and achieve "reasonably safe" elevation of 20 feet, to build at Pleasant Beach, "it's just not the kind of place that's safe to build on."

He explained, the aggregate material that makes up the beach can be easily moved around by the ocean.

"You can get the sense the beach is moving," he said.

"However, we'd all like to live here, whether we admit it or not," he said. "The vistas are lovely here."

Changes in regulations require any house built on Pleasant Beach to be placed on pilings, to allow the beach freedom to flow.

Clapp told the group, the town should acquire the open land at this site if only to avoid the cost of town counsel for defending the local bylaws against developers.

"Building there could give the Town headaches in the long run," he said.

"As far as land goes, if you want to protect it, you've got to own it," he commented. "That's the bottom line."

Finally, the club made its way to Gulf Pond.

"This is essentially a broad, shallow, tidal river," Clapp said. "It has characteristics of its own, such as fresh water intrusion."

He said, the waters here are abundant with life; migratory fishes come to Gulf Pond to spawn.

Sewage and chemical runoffs, as well as boat wakes and winter ice could combine for a "significant negative impact" here, Clapp said.

"In a town like Cohasset, where the character lies in a series of residential communities, rather than industry, what will affect the town should be done carefully and thoughtfully," he advised.

"Good government, good planning and good local involvement can only emanate from the citizens of those communities."

He urged, "Get involved in your town government and participate in the planning process. Look for available methods for protecting what you consider to be the sense of Cohasset.

"The realization that you get what you pay for is important," he added. "I would urge that with the pressure of the economic boom and development, this is a time to rally, to look at your Town bylaws and to plan carefully, because there will be growth.

"If you're not helping to make it good, concerted, planned growth," he said, "then you will be partially responsible for whatever it is you don't like somewhere down the road."

After-school day care

move forward with its after-school child care program.

Furthermore, the committee agreed to expand the program to include sixth graders.

Assistant Superintendent Stephen Hart explained the parents of a third grader enrolled in the program asked that the student's sixth grade sibling also be included, so the family could avoid hiring a babysitter.

He added the activities the students will participate in the after school program would be appropriate for the age group of students in the sixth grade.

"We made it in just under the wire," he told the committee. "We have just enough students to make the program self-supporting."

Hart added the program does not have a closed enrollment and as more students enroll in the program, the teacher-director would be supported by additional staff.

Speaking of staff, the School Committee patched a hole in the administration roster, created when Gino DiGirolamo resigned as Cohasset High School's assistant principal in June.

John DeLorenzo of Plymouth was a "unanimous choice," Crowell said.

With a masters degree in educational administration and supervision, DeLorenzo has served since October 1985 as Coordinator of Health and Physical Education in Weymouth.

He has had various assignments as a teacher and as an administrator in both New Jersey and Massachusetts.

In an unusual move, the School Committee agreed not to accept the resignation of kindergarten-teacher Christine Collins.

Instead, the committee decided to extend Collins' unpaid leave of absence by one year.

Crowell explained, the extension was Collins' original request and such a move would leave the door open for her to return to the Cohasset school system.

He described the teacher as a "valued member" of faculty.

Presently, Collins is administering a K through 5th grade program at Achusnet Elementary School in Achusnet, Massachusetts.

Finally, the committee voted to accept a $1,000 donation by Warner Bros. in appreciation for the use of Deer Hill School in filming "The Witches of Eastwick."

Warner Bros. location manager Sam Mercer offered to credit the school $1,000 worth of school supplies at J. L. Hammet Co., a school supply house. The committee expressed its gratitude.

A 100-year survivor - meet Mrs. George Willard Smith

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

If you run into Mrs. George Willard Smith today, you ought to salute her. She's a survivor.

Exactly 100 years ago today, Smith embarked on her first journey; life. And all week long she has been attending parties in her honor, commemorating that commencement.

The Cohasset Garden Club, of which she has been a member for about 20 years, will honor Smith by planting a tulip tree on Cohasset Common, across from Town Hall.

At the party they held for her last Wednesday, hosted by Mrs. Samuel Wakeman of Atlantic Avenue and Mrs. Clarence Knapp, Smith surprised her fellow gardeners with a speech that was more poignant than flowery.

Inspired by a bookof three Greek plays including: "Prometheus Bound" ; "Agamemnon" and "The Trojan Women," and by a recent article in Reader's Digest by Rabbi Kushner, Smith rendered her philosophy of life and death.

"Living life to one's fullest ability and learning to be young, however old you are," were the main themes of Smith's speech.

"As Aesculus said, 'To learn is to be young, however old,'" she commented. "When he said this, he was an old man himself, but he knew the secret of perpetual youth."

She quoted Kushner's four rules for a meaningful life:

1. Accept challenge and pain
2. Be close to people
3. Know you have made a difference
4. Live until you die.

Challenge and pain were but a game in her college years, Smith recalled.

"I used to go hiking in those days at Mount Holyoke," she said, "and we had a very unappreciative Mrs. Green, who was an arbiter of the college. We never told her what we were going to do, if we could help it.

"She'd always say, 'That would be establishing a precedent and we couldn't have anything like that, could we dear?'" Smith said.

"So anything we wanted to do that was new, we never told her."

In the autumn of her senior year, 1908, Smith and three of her basketball teammates departed from the Mount Holyoke campus on a thirty-mile hike across the Berkshires, to her roommate's house in Middleton.

"South Hadley was a day-and-a-half from there," she said, "and we were hiking in our basketball outfits, which were very discreet.

"We wore a sailor-khaki top," she added, "with very thin, small bloomers and a khaki skirt. So it was perfectly neat and tidy, although the skirts only came down to our knees; the rest of the time, the skirts came down to our ankles."

Mrs. George Willard Smith

As the four adventurers were "tramping through Cummington," she recalled, "a sweet, little old lady" invited them in for a cup of tea. The trip was such a success, they decided to go again in the spring.

This time, a substitute for one of the original four, "who wasn't so used to tramping," got a blister far from campus.

"She was very miserable," Smith said, "so we decided we had to send her home, and that took most of our money.

"We had started away with $5 apiece," she said, "and we decided we couldn't afford much supper."

She added, "So, we were in this little inn for the night and we ordered cups of hot water and tea bags.

"Well, the proprietor came up and said the waitress had heard our conversation and would be very glad to charge us for a meal and we could send it back sometime," she said.

"We said, 'Thank you just the same, but we're doing this on $5 and we're going to keep to it,'" she added.

The next morning, the voyagers bought some crackers and cheese for breakfast and marched 30 miles back to school, where they arrived "solvent, but hungry."

While hiking later with the Appalachian Mountain Club, where she met her husband, Smith said she got used to sleeping under bridges on rainy nights.

Those hikes instilled a love for travel and adventure that may never quit.

Smith said she has travelled all over the world; her last big swing was a safari through the Serenghetti, while in her 80s.

Smith has taken time between her travels to help others along.

In Cambridge, where she now lives, Smith recently led a fundraising drive that netted $15,000 and garnered the city a new bookmobile.

Also, the New England Life Insurance Co., which her husband headed as president and chairman until his death in 1968, has set up a scholarship fund in her name at Mount Holyoke.

"I hope they're going to get quite a sizeable sum for scholarships for girls who otherwise couldn't get to college," she said. "I have already had notice from the college of four people who have sent in money, and it's delightful."

Thirty-nine members of her immediate family, and countless friends have been helping Smith celebrate her 100th birthday all month. But today, it's official. Happy Birthday!

H&R BLOCK TO OFFER TAX SCHOOLS THROUGHOUT BOSTON & SOUTH SHORE AREA

Thousands of people are learning to prepare income tax returns.

H & R Block, the world's largest income tax preparation service, is offering a basic income tax course starting the week of September 8th with morning and evening classes available. Classes will be held in H & R Block offices throughout the Boston and South Shore areas.

During the 14 week course, students will study all phases of income tax preparation and receive actual experience in preparing individual returns. Experienced Block personnel will teach current laws, theory, and application as practiced in Block offices nationwide. There is a classroom lecture on each subject and practice problems at every level. Courses are programmed to teach students increasingly complex tax problems as study progresses. Students will find the course both interesting and challenging.

Anyone may enroll. There are no restrictions or qualifications. Courses are ideally suited for housewives, retired persons, teachers, or anyone wanting to increase their tax knowledge.

Qualified course graduates may be offered job interviews for positions with Block. Many accept employment with Block because of the flexible hours available. However, Block is under no obligation to offer employment, nor are graduates under any obligation to accept employment with H & R Block. Those students that are employed by Block however may be eligible for a rebate of the tuition paid to attend the course.

Registration forms and a brochure for the income tax course may be obtained by contacting the H & R Block district office at 19 Commercial Street, E. Braintree, MA 02184, telephone (617) 848-4240.

This course is regulated by the Massachusetts Department of Education. H & R Block is a member of the Massachusetts Association of Private Career Schools.

Council on Aging news

Special to the Mariner

In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts there are currently over 1,000 graduates of the two-day Massachusetts Elder Advocats Training Program. Recently, some of these graduates were asked the question: "How have you used the information learned at Elder Advocates session?

While responses varied, every graduate reported that he or she had benefitted from participating in the training session.

Elder Advocats live all over Massachusetts and are active in many outside activities. An Elder Advocate may also be a senior aide, Elder Service Corps member, Ombudsman, or a member of AARP, MAOA, Mass Senior Action Council, Older Women's League, Gray Panthers, or a Local Council on Aging.

In September the beginning of a new Fall 1986 Mass. Elder Advocates Training Program will begin. Each fall this program attracts many new and interested senior Advocates while they provide ongoing advocacy training for previous graduates.

Throughout the Commonwealth, elder advocates make significant contributions,bringing knowledge and commitment to their own communities. Working together, we can influence issues facing elders and the community. Registration forms are available at the Senior Center. 383-9112.

The "Dog Days" of Summer

While the summer months mean outdoor fun at the beach and outdoor barbeques, hot and humid weather also increases the risk of heat-related illness, especially in the elderly.

According to Dr. Phillip Paris, Director of Medicine at the Daughters of Jacob Geriatric Center, an elderly person's chances of becoming ill because of heat can be reduced by: being aware of general causes and symptoms of heat-related illness, knowing what emergency steps to take if symptoms appear, and following some simple precautions on hot and humid days.

Dr. Paris says, "Two reasons why senior citizens are more vulnerable to heat-related illness are their lower bodily water reserve and fewer number of sweat glands. Seniors' normally lower water reserves can become dangerously low on hot and humid days. In addition, the reduced number of sweat glands in elderly individuals may not cool them sufficiently and cause them to overheat."

Dr. Paris continued, "Among the symptoms that signal a heat-related illness and indicate that immediate action should be taken are weakness, headache, nausea, dizziness, extreme thirst, and, in severe cases, loss of muscular coordination, mental confusion and even unconsciousness.

Under any of the above circumstances, immediate first aid steps should be taken including moving the elderly person into a shaded, cool area, removing as much clothing as possible, wetting down the person's body with cold towels and calling emergency or ambulance assistance."

On the days that are particularly hot and humid, there are some general precautions that should be taken:

Avoid sitting outside for prolonged periods of time, particularly on hot and humid days when perspiration doesn't evaporate and overheating is more likely.

When sitting outside on warmer days, wear loose, lightweight clothing, particularly in light colors to reflect the sunlight.

Take in liquids, but not water alone. It is important to take in drinks and foods that naturally contain sodium.

Use a fan outside as well as inside on hot days. Staying indoors in an airconditioned room is the ideal situation on real hot days.

around town

☐ The Grassey family of 20 Ledge Way attended the National Conference for Children and Adults with Autism in July in Washington, DC.

At a reception at the Capitol, the Massachusetts contingent presented Sen. John Kerry with an award for his service to autistic citizens.

Attending the conference were Jerry Kramer, immediate past president of the National Society, Ellen Wike of Framingham and Ernie Grassey, former presidents of the Massachusetts chapter of NSAC, Eileen Kramer, present president of Mass. Chapter of NSAC, and Norma Grassey, present second vice president of Mass. Chapter.

Ernie was elected to the National Board of Directors at the five-day conference.

☐ Ruth and Joe Silvia had a big event to celebrate recently, and they did so in grand style! Ruth and Joe have been Mr. and Mrs. Silvia for fifty years, and their family had a large gathering at their farm in Gilsum, New Hampshire to honor the event. Imagine being married for fifty years . . .congratulations from all of us go to the Silvias.

☐ Two gals were spotted rowing in a dinghy last Friday night, they were doing so with a definite goal in mind. They had to get to the boat, moored in the harbor, so that they might catch filming of the movie that was taking place on the bridge. Alna Ekberg and Carol Ciciotte waited and watched, but couldn't see one thing . . .now that's what we call dedication (or something).

☐ The Scituate-Cohasset Newcomers Club elected a new person to the helm recently. Congratulations are in order for Linda Coyle of Cohasset, who will be their new president. Linda is a former resident of Southern California, and will take over the reins from Mary Moberg. Linda claims to be very happily adjusted in Cohasset, even after leaving beautiful California weather for the "junk" we've had this summer! Here's hoping that your presidency will be a successful one, and that you continue to love Cohasset as much as we do!

☐ Speaking of Cohasset, we will all be watching to see how Wendy White did this weekend in her bid for the Miss Teen Massachusetts 1986 Pageant, which was held at the Westborough Plaza Hotel.

The Grassle family (Ernie, Kristin and Norma, right) met U.S. Senator John Kerry during the National Conference for Children and Adults with Autism in Washington D.C. in July.

☐ Last weekend was a real treat, as Donna Green and her mother, B. Spencer Green, were the guests of Kit and Kaboodle to display their latest paintings and prints. Donna signed her full color summer reproduction of Cohasset common (to follow her mother's winter version). Their work is truly wonderful, and you can look at it forever, always finding something you missed the time before . . .

☐ Happy to report that Josie DiGirlomo is making rapid strides recouperating from her recent surgery! Anyone who knows her knows that she has more pep and stamina than any three people combined, so we are sure that she will be right back on top in record time!

☐ Although we are lucky to have a health agent that is doing such a grand job, why did it have to come up with such a high bacteria count on one of the few sunny days last week? On a more serious note, thank heavens he was there to test it, otherwise there could have been a lot of sick residents in our town last week!

☐ Mark Sept. 7 on your calendar, it surely will be a day to remember! That is the day the Jimmy Fund softball game, where Cohasset Town Officials will play against the town of Scituate. Its rumored that Jim Lonborg will be their ace pitcher, and our town is looking for one of its own! Any town employee or official is encouraged to volunteer their athletic abilities to help meet the challenge! All proceeds from the game will go to the Jimmy Fund, a most worthy cause.

☐ Trunks are being packed now, and the tears (from the moms) are beginning to form as the class of 1986 readies themselves for their new ventures into college life. We wish all of you a wonderful year, and urge you to keep in touch to let us know what is going on in your college life. Its really fun for all to read!

☐ Congratulations to the South Shore Art Center, which was recently awarded $3,000 from the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities. The announcement was made recently by State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, and she is "proud of the work this group is doing, and of the contribution they are making to the quality of life in our area".

☐ Hope that Jessica and Rebecca Jenkins are talking to me after last week's column. I stated that Rebecca had won the prize for her original composition on the recorder when it was Jessica that worked so hard for the award. And, due to a typographical error on my part, it said that Rebecca made Pink Blue in the Kitchen, it should have said Pink Glue! Sure glad that my typing teacher, Miss Nelson, isn't around to read that, and my sincere apologies go to Jessica and Rebecca for the mix-up.

☐ Saw David O'Connell recently, bet he's glad to be home after his stay in the Orient while in the service. Hope he is here to stay!

☐ First Lt. Charles D. Coe, son of John W. and Marcia S. Coe of 23 Pond Street, has been decorated with the Army Achievement Medal at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. This medal is awarded to soldiers for meritorious service, acts of courage or other accomplishments. Lt. Coe is a fire direction officer with the 82nd Airborne Division.

☐ Wasn't it nice that the Swim Center had a sunny Sunday (the first in seven weeks) for their Family Day! It was reported that a grand time was had by all.

☐ Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Clark (our former selectman who now lives in New Hampshire) were in town recently, looking wonderful. New Hampshire life must certainly agree with them. But we miss them and were glad to see them.

☐ The PSO (Cohasset Parent School Organization) has begun to work on its school calendar for 1986-1987, so if you have a date that you would like included (school-affiliated clubs, civic or community organizations are all invited to respond) call Merlyn Cocoran at 383-6862 or drop a postcard to PSO, Box 30, Cohasset. If you were on last year's calendar, someone will be in touch with you.

☐ Congratulations to Ted Abbadessa, who won the first trophy for catching the biggest Bluefish of the week. The contest is being sponsored by Trask Tackle, and has a few weeks left so keep trying to catch those elusive Blues, sport!

☐ That's it for this week, keep your news coming.

Cohasset swim team comes home with title

Sports news

The downpour on Saturday morning by no means lead to the downfall of the Cohasset Swim Team.

The team defeated Scituate Harbor and Hanover to take the South Shore League Title for the second time in as many years.

The victory marked the first time Cohasset has come home with back-to-back titles.

Because those clubs swimming in the meet represented the three best teams in the seven team league, the scores were extremely close throughout.

When the last swimmer touched the wall, Cohasset had a 24 point lead.

Two swimmers who contributed 17.5 points each to the Cohasset score were David Leahy and Lauren DeVito, who earned three individual firsts.

Jennifer Jackson and Christian Anderson placed first twice, and Brooke Anderson, Liz Buckley, John DeLima, Kate DeLima, Robin DeVito, Caroline DeLima, Christopher Henderson, each received one personal first.

Other scoring swimmers include Ian Kinox, Amy Hobbs, Michiel Gobes, Becky Golden, Scott Theriault, Katie Carroll, Matt Buckley, Jay Staunton, Peter Buckley, Thomas Greco, Danny Baird, Alison Doherty, Veronica DeVos, Tracy Reardon and Joel Whitman.

The Cohasset swimmers had a week of difficult practice to prepare for the finals.

During that week timings were held and those with the fastest times were chosen to represent Cohasset in the meet.

The coaches would especially like to thank the swimmers who gave the added effort in practice, but did not get to swim in the championships.

The top five scorers of the 1986 season were David Leahy (115.5), Chip Anderson (99.5), Chris Henderson (97.5), Amy Hobbs (86) and Peter Buckley (85.5).

State Rep. Murray wants new Lottery machine nixed

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray wants to abolish the new Lottery gaming machines.

These machines can automatically dispense Lottery tickets simply by inserting money and selecting a number.

For several months, Murray has been pushing legislature that would disallow the State Lottery Commission "to use any devices that will accept a coin, token, or similar object and pay off a winner," but to no avail.

The bills became the responsibility of a study commission and, in essence, shelved.

Yet, Murray has sent a letter emphasizing her displeasure and explaining her position for the removal of the machines to State Treasurer Robert Crane and State Lottery Director Jame Hosker.

The Representative's major concern is that gambling devices are being installed against the people's will. The state treasury conducted a poll several years ago to assess the people's interest in such machines, and the project was cancelled because the response was unfavorable.

Murray said "these ticket vending machines which have been so unwisely placed in various businesses and institutions are an affront to those of us who worked so hard to keep Casino gambling out of Massachusetts."

Rep. Murray added that these machines will now make gambling more accessible for children and for the people who generally become compulsive gamblers, those who can least afford it.

She said "there is no need for these gaming devices as the Commonwealth already has a substancial surplus which should be sent back to the taxpayers. The intake of more money is unnecessary if not inefficient."

Here is a copy of her letter to Treasurer Crane.

"I am extremely disappointed and upset that you and Mr. Hosker have ignored the fact that people in this Commonwealth have been opposed to the type of gambling which you and the lottery have recently introduced.

"You conducted a poll several years ago to see if the people wanted these machines. You said at that time you would not have these machines because your poll showed the people did not want them. Is Bally that persuasive, to have you ignore your own poll results by the people.

"These ticket vending machines which you have so unwisely placed in various businesses and institutions are an affront to a state which has said "No" to Casino gambling. Any answer to that statement will not satisfy me or my constituents.

"Apparently, you have no concern or understanding of the consequences of your action! It is well known that the people who gamble to win big are at the lower or lower middle income levels. There are too many compulsive gamblers in the Commonwealth and you have encouraged their problem by adding these machines to your lottery!

"Placing signs stating that no one under 18 years of age cannot use the machines is a farce! We cannot keep young people from purchasing alcoholic beverages so how do you propose to monitor your gambling machines! Remember, no one knows whether they are compulsive gamblers until that first bet! Is Government in business to encourage people to lose their money?

"Why do you feel the Commonwealth needs more money? We have a very substantial surplus, which, incidentally, should be sent back to the taxpayers, so why do we need more money?

"I will repeat, I am extremely disappointed and upset with your actions."

Protecting our shores

The closing of Sandy Beach last week illustrates the importance of keeping our natural resources free from disturbance and pollution. It's a difficult job, and we're not sure how well we've done.

What happened to Sandy Beach last week may not have been the fault of our citizens. If health agent Joseph Godzik is correct, it was the damned sewer treatment plant spewing forth from Nut Island in Boston Harbor. This so-called treatment plant is scheduled for appropriate closure, but when? In the meantime, while the state drags its feet and wrings its hands, the out-of-date, malfunctioning plant spills untreated raw sewerage into Boston Harbor, Quincy Bay, and down the coast to Hull, Cohasset and Scituate. If there are heavy rains, and this ha been a great season for it, the floodgates are opened because of the overload in the plant. Bingo, instantly the waters off the Massachusetts coast become a great garbage disposal.

Our sewer commissioners have fought the state for years now, against the installation of a Nut Island-type central sewer plant in our harbor. Aside from costing millions of dollars, we haven't seen many examples of its effectiveness.

And while Nut Island curses and destroys Boston Harbor and Quincy Bay, the state has been busily forcing a similar plant down our throats.

We support the alternative sewer plan because of the reduced cost to our citizens, and also to show the state what we think of their method of treating sewerage and cleaning the harbor waters. It stinks.

On a local level, there are many other things we must do to protect our precious shoreline. And that is not to overdevelop the property so beautiful but so delicate along Cohasset's ledgey coast.

Anyone with an eye for spectacular beauty and a sense of economic gain, would try to buy up some of this property along our coast. Homes in that vicinity regularly sell for a $1 million or more.

Whether it's surrounding Little Harbor, Black Rock Beach or Sandy Beach, development along our watershed and our coast must not continue. We are intruding on the natural course of our water supply and our fragile eco-systems that border the ocean.

Most any engineer worth his salt can prove why a development can safely be constructed along a marsh, in the wetlands, and atop high reaches of ledge. But the only safe way to protect these natural resources, the ultimate reason why we moved here in the first place, is to prohibit all development in these vastly-needed and vanishing areas.

Keep the jackals away from the milch cow

To the Editor:

In response to George A. Hodgkins letter reciting the statements of the Safe Energy Communication Council, he should realize that the real agenda of most, perhaps all, organizations with pretty names like "Safe Energy" is the denigration of nuclear energy.

Their gestures toward promotion of other means of generating electricity are usually so feeble as to make even clearer their real intent.

One of these, and perhaps others, have stated that nuclear energy cannot be safe in the profit-motivated free enterprise system (they call it capitalistic), but could be quite safe under a "socialist" system — presumably a euphemism for the Soviet system.

Although probably not financed or directed by the USSR, their destructive and irresponsible behavior, together with the behavior of so many other individuals and groups who work to undermine faith in our institutions, and the well-meaning dupes so ready to be foot soldiers, illustrate deTocquevilles' famous prediction that "America needs no enemies, she will be destroyed from within".

For more on these groups see "The War Against the Atom" by Sam McCracken of Boston University, which should be in every good library.

Certainly nuclear energy, or any other activity, should be questioned by responsible individuals and organizations. But distorting NRC statements, as does the Safe Energy Communication Council, is not responsible. Fortunately, journalists are becoming more wary about using anti-nuclear handouts.

Only a few newspapers were innocent enough to reprint the recent release from SECC. As for "raising legitimate questions about safety," there's not much need to second guess the NRC. Rather than being a handmaiden to industry, as the critics like to allege, the NRC is a zealous and exacting taskmaster. Its perceptive and comprehensive questioning has required millions of man-hours of analysis in response.

That's part of the reason for the excellent safety record of nuclear power in the free world; but the major reason is the competence and integrity of our professional engineers.

It's also simply good business practice to build and operate a reliable and safe facility. The much publicized malfunctions of equipment and people illustrate the rigorous control and self examination that has been so effective in catching and correcting small matters before they grow to be more hazardous. What other industry publicly lists its adjustments to equipment and behavior to maintain efficiency and safety?

Chernobyl did not have an effective containment, although it did have a peculiar concept of compartmentalizing equipment and reactor in separate boxes, each of which was vented to a water pool for condensation of steam, and only in that respect similar to the pressure suppression system used on some US-style water reactors. The competence of Soviet engineers and scientists should be recognized — but so should the pressures placed on them by the limitations of their resources relative to the ambitions of their government.

Nuclear energy is narrowly viewed by its critics either as a profit source for bad industry or as a mad scheme of career aggrandizement for its proponents. The far-sighted recognize it as an essential national resource, just as our marvelously productive energy-based industrial system is a national resource that provides a higher standard of living than the world has ever known and generates the

Quote proves the need to take scriptures in context

To the Editor:

Rev. Hutchinson's historical study on witchcraft was very interesting. I am concerned that the Roman Catholic Church supported witchcraft until 1230. The lack of interest showed by the Catholic clergy about the "Witches of Eastwick" would seem to say that they have recant bact to their pre -1230 position.

I wish that Rev. Hutchinson had quoted one or two verses of the verses he cited from Galatains chapter 5. Galatains chapter 5 verse 20 is the middle of the sentence. The thought begins at Galatians 5 verse 18. It reads as follows: "But if you are lead by the Spirit, you are not under the Law. Now the deeds of the flesh are evident, which are: immorality, impurity, sensuality, idolity, sorcery, enmities, strife, jealously, out bursts of angry, disputes dissensions, factions,..." (Sorcery is translated witchcraft).

The first part of the quotation proves the need to take the scriptures in context. Paul is telling the Galatain church that living by the power of the Holy Spirit will enable you to live a new life apart from the old man that needed witchcraft. Witchcraft was pre-Christian to the people of Galacia.

I am not for the burning of books which are off-the-wall and unorthodox. I am for the open exchange of information which should include the Bible. The free flow of information was used by God the Father to lead me to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ.

Thank you for taking the time to read this non-theologians opinion.

Especially pleased with the new-found excitement were those businesses with items to sell to the influx of tourists, cast and crew.

Inside Cohasset Hardware, which was converted to Eastwick Hardware for the movie, Tina Watson reported the store did lose some business on filming days but that the experience of the film-making was fun. Tina and her brother James run the store for their father Louis Watson. The family has already hung the special Eastwick Hardware sign up on the inside wall of their store. One outside set was filmed showing a chauffeur walking out the hardware store door.

"The movie people were very nice, and not many customers complained," Tina Watson said. "And it is something that will never happen again."

Just down the street at Cohasset Central Market, which was also allowed to keep their Eastwick Central Market sign, office worker Elaine Costello reported that some regular customers were a little put off by the filming on days when it was difficult to get into the store. One set was shot in front of the market showing Susan Sarandon running from the building.

"But the tourist trade, we did very well by them," Costello said. "And the movie people were very gracious. They were good to deal with and bent over backwards to be considerate. I think that the general consensus is that everything went well, the crowds never got out of hand, and it was fun."

Next door at Kit and Kaboodle, Renee LeClerc reported much the same feelings. LeClerc said that the craft shop was busy during filming, but that the store is still busy when compared to business in May and June.

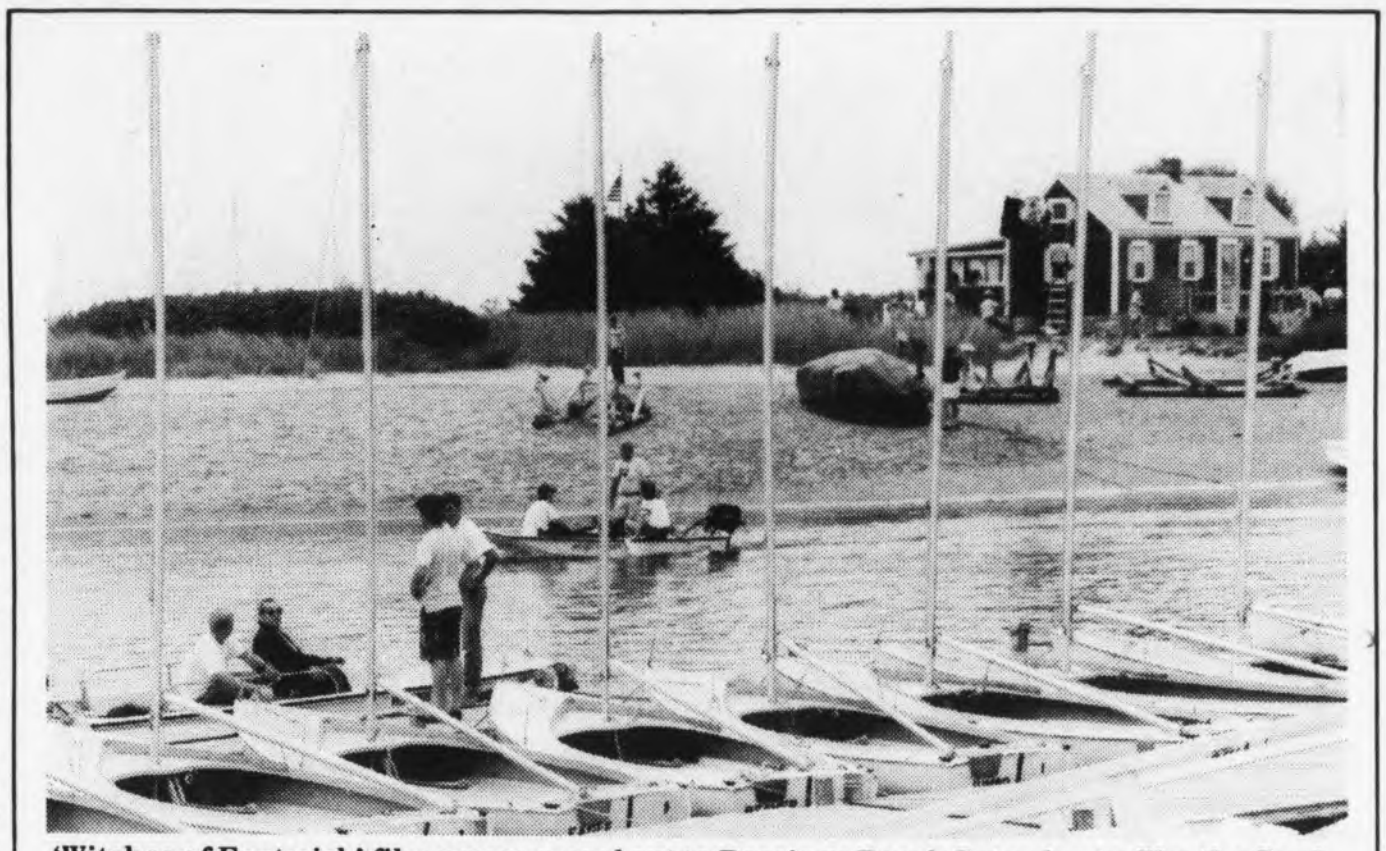
She said that most customers got caught up in the excitement and didn't seem to mind being inconvenienced; that only a few complained about the difficulty in parking.

At Dependable Cleaners on the corner, Pat Sargent said that about ten percent of their customers complained about not being able to park close, but that the film crews were "some of the nicest people, not pushy, they did the job the way they had to do it."

"We survived pretty well," Sargent explained."It wasn't even an inconvenience except for one day when we had to stand in the street for three-quarters of an hour when the angle of the camera outside was catching our motion through the windows. It was exciting. I miss them."

A different feeling was found at Pilgrim Cooperative Bank where the manager reported that most customers were upset by the need to park far away or for being told that they couldn't go down into the village. And the owner of the Texaco station said that his business was definitely affected by the village street closing.

Dick Straley, owner of Cards and Shards, and vice president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, was one of five members named to a crisis board which formed to help solve any problems during the filming. Straley's shop was also under contract to Warner Bros. and was one of four village businesses used for inside shots.



'Witches of Eastwick' film crews rowed out to Bassings Beach Saturday to film the final scenes of the Cohasset shoot.

Straley said that area businesses obviously had some interruptions and that these interruptions during filming lasted longer than owners were originally told.

"But I had no problem," Straley reported. "Figures were better than last year. I have a very good feeling about what happened here. We're a small town and, to me, it felt like the circus had come to town."

Straley added that the film people were "super nice, courteous, and a pleasure to work with."

Working in the Bavaria Shop, Amy Lane reported business had been slow during the filming, but that between takes the film crew would come in and purchase clothing and accessories. Lane also described the film crew as being very courteous.

At Sharon's Chocolate Factory, Lauren Kalita said that the shop had done very well during the filming.

"It's been crazy, but very good for our business," Kalita said.

With the store "constantly packed," owner Sharon Greene was kept busy constantly making her hand-dipped chocolates, Kalita reported. The shop also sold close to 300 "I Met the Witches, Cohasset '86" tee shirts at $6.99 apiece.

Two doors up, at Goodale Insurance Company, secretary Tara Stanford reported that their business was not affected at all. Most of the company's business this time of year is handled over the phone, she said.

But across the street at Petersen Realtors and Insurance Agency, Sally Wood voiced some very mixed feelings.

"I really enjoyed it but it wore very thin at the end. I know our business was affectd and some customers were perturbed. It was not easy and we're glad it's over. I must say, though, the crew was very cooperative and very nice and certainly tried very hard."

Wood did say that she found the filming interesting, and told of the day Jack Nicholson and executive director John Peters were sitting right under her awning out on the sidewalk. But she described the week as "like someone stepping into your living room and taking over for seven days."

With Wood's clientele deterred from getting into the village, and with no lights nor air conditioning during filming, Wood said that her business was totally adversely affected.

"I tried to smile through it," she reported. "But it was a once in a lifetime experience and I hope the movie turns out well."

ConCom to check antenna company's drainage signals

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Fearing a possibility of pollutants accidentally entering a town water supply, the conservation commission will investigate ways to regulate an antenna manufacturing company's drainage system on Route 3A.

The drainage system of Seavey Engineering Associates, an antenna manufacturing and design company, feeds into a state drainpipe that flows under Route 3A and into an area near Sanctuary Pond.

The facility is in the watershed area for the Sohier Street town wells.

The conservation commission was not aware that the facility's drainage system was connected to the state drainpipe until a complaint was received about a month ago, according to Chairman Merle Brown.

The facility was completed and began operations in March, company president John Seavey told the board Tuesday night.

Because plans and permits for the facility were approved by the appropriate town boards before the new hazardous waste bylaw and water resource protection district went into effect, the commission is not sure what steps can be taken to regulate the drainage system.

"I don't know if the business would be let in there now," said Commissioner Jeff Bettinger, "but it was built in compliance with laws existing at the time.

"Beforehand we could have required various traps on the drains," he said, "but what can we do after the fact?"

The commission fears that pollutants could accidentally enter the drainage system on the site, and flow through the state drainpipe to Sanctuary Pond.

"My biggest concern is what might get dumped in the system by accident," said Commissioner William Parmenter.

"It is in the watershed," said Bettinger. "It's a pretty easy shot for anything to go into the storm drain and into the pond."

Seavey received approval from the state department of public works to connect the drainage system with the state pipe.

He also said that the town was aware of the drainage plan.

"We met with the selectmen and asked permission to discharge the water into the pipe under Route 3A," said Seavey. "The drainage water going into Sanctuary Pond was addressed at that time."

Seavey also noted that any chemicals used on the site are taken away by a chemical waste removal company.

Bettinger said that the drainage committee was impressed with the drainage system when the plan was under review.

The commission will seek further information on the system from an engineering consultant who worked on the plan before scheduling another meeting with Seavey.

Nuclear energy is a legitimate answer to U. S. power needs excess wealth (through taxation) that supports a spectrum of public services and the ability to be generous and protective of less fortunate peoples.

The nation's electrical usage has increased more than 30 percent since 1973, although the use of non-electric energy has declined. The trend will continue, not because of machinations of industry, but because population growth, upward mobility and public preferences drive it. Nuclear energy must play a large part in satisfying that demand, only coal is capable of playing an equally major role.

Responsible citizens should therefore ask legitimate questions not only about nuclear energy, but about our future energy needs, about the relationship between adequate electricity and national well being, about the real limitations of the alternatives to nuclear energy, about the real reason for the escalation of nuclear power costs — and about the quality of the "information" disseminated by organizations with nice names like "Safe Energy".

I notice that the trash books on the nuclear issue get much play in the public libraries, while the worthwhile books stay on the shelves. Harder to read I guess, and not as titillating as trashing the engineering and scientific community.

So do your homework a little more thoroughly Mr. Hodgkins, and you may begin to see nuclear energy as a sort of national milch cow that needs to be nurtured to maintain the wonders of electricity — and you may get to recognize a jackal's cry. Of what use are legitimate questions unless you are interested in the legitimate answers?

A longtime Weston resident, Mercer moved to the Los Angeles area 13 years ago. He and his wife Darlene recently purchased a home in Malibu.

And to honor that occasion, the Chamber and the Massachusetts Film Bureau selected a few specifically Massachusetts-flavored gifts for the Mercers.

Julie Wrinn from the state film bureau first paid tribute to the town of Cohasset for its cooperation throughout the pre-production work and the filming of "Witches." Executive Secretary Don Andrew accepted a Paul Revere bowl in behalf of selectmen.

"Even though I am not the governor," she said, "I would like to represent him. Thanks from the Commonwealth to Cohasset for your incredible cooperation without which we couldn't have filmed here." The inscription on the town's bowl reads "to the Board of Selectmen and the people of Cohasset. For your superb cooperation during the filming of "The Witches of Eastwick." Governor Michael Dukakis, the Summer of 1986."

Wrinn noted that without cooperation and speedy telegrams to Warner Brothers from State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, Sen. William Golden, Selectmen Chairman Mary Jane McArthur, Hingham Selectman Edward Lewiecki, and South Shore Chamber of Commerce president Ronald Zooleck, the movie never would have been filmed in this state. "Because of you, we realize $150 million each year (from the film industry)" Wrinn noted.

Norfolk County Sheriff Clifford Marshall attended Monday night's reception without a warrant for Mercer's arrest, but with a number of presents.

Several county deputy sheriffs shared traffic details with the Cohasset Police Department during the hectic days of filming in Cohasset. Claiming the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department is the best in the country, Sheriff Marshall made Mercer an honorary Norfolk County sheriff. The frame of the proclaimation notice was made, Marshall declared, by inmates of the county jail. Mercer was also given a sheriff's decal and a gold badge.

As the crowd laughed at the booty, Mercer noted that without the local police department and the sheriff's cooperation, the filming could not have taken place.

In behalf of an anonymous donor, Mercer was honored with two hats, one emblazoned with the Town of Cohasset insignia and the other with the Town of Eastwick emblem. A special tee-shirt was given Mercer, stating, "Warner Brothers and the Witches of Eastwick" on the front, and "Witches on location in Cohasset, the summer of 1986" on the back.

A pictoral scene of Cohasset Common and an aerial photograph of the Common and Little Harbor were presented to Mercer. Both locations were strategic scenes in the filming in Cohasset.

From the state film bureau Mercer was gifted with a strange red lobster baseball cap, a plastic scene of Fanueil Hall, a salt and pepper shaker in the shape of lobster claws, a brass lobster bell and Boston baked beans.

Unable to locate a gold key to the community, Sawchuk presented Mercer with a wood-carved key created specifically to open up the Town of Eastwick.

"I feel like this is a party of friends," Mercer told the guests applauding in his honor. "This is like a family get together. I've got to know so many of you working on this production. I'm glad you have all been a part of it."

As a momento from Warner Brothers, each member of the Chamber's executive board of directors were given official Warner Brothers baseball caps.

A special gift was given to president Sawchuk "for bridging the gap and smoothing the edges" between the production and the business community. Noting that Wayne once inquired whether he needed a special badge which would allow him to view the filming, Mercer gifted him with an official Warner Brothers black satin baseball jacket. "Oohs" filled the reception room as the admiring crowd uttered its approval.

"This will get you into the North Shore," Mercer said, referring to the film crew's current work along that area of the state.

Earlier in the evening Sawchuk noted that several film crew members and eagerly anticipated stars would be unlikely to attend the Monday night reception. Because of the heavy rains in Cohasset, the schedule had been switched to the North Shore on Monday "where it also was raining," joked publicist Don Levy.

In behalf of director George Miller and producer Neil Cantor, Levy noted, "the excitement will return as soon as you see yourself on the screen. We have enjoyed New England and your hospitality and hope you have had fun with the magic of the movies."

As Mercer noted in a conversation earlier Monday evening, "as soon as I saw Cohasset, I knew it was what I wanted."

Hello Jack!

A movie's magical summer scene in Cohasset

By David Featherston
Special to the Mariner
(David is a student at Northeastern University. He visited Cohasset during the recent filming. Ed.)

"Is anyone going to take a picture?" said Jack Nicholson somewhat jokingly as he made his way towards his trailer accompained by a Pinkerton security cop. "Hold on Jack, I'll take a picture of ya!" I said as he paused and reached out his hand to shake the hands of a few patient onlookers who had just viewed a scene of next year's movie in the making, "The Witches of Eastwick." I took two quick snapshots of him standing only inches away and then eagerly stuck in my hand for a complementary shake so I could know for myself that he was for real.

"How do you like Cohasset, Jack?" blurted one obvious fan of the actor. "Nice little town but what I'd like to know is where's the beach?" "It's over there," I answered quickly pointing in the general direction of Cohasset's Sandy Beach, followed by a few chuckles from the crowd. He gave a few autographs, shook a few more hands, and was on his way to his trailer marking the end of another shooting session and the start of the crew's lunch break.

For the past month now, the sleepy little sea town of Cohasset has been turned into a tourist-luring Hollywood set of the fictional town Eastwick. Cohasset has in the past attracted a sizable crowd whenever the South Shore Music Circus opens its tent for various renowned actors, comedians, and singers. But this year, things were definitely different for the residents of the town.

On this 10th day of August, Director George Miller and his crew would do three scenes for the movie all involving Nicholson being blown about by punishing, gale-force winds and engulfed by thousands of feathers, leaves, and a few chairs from a nearby truck. In one scene he gets blown on his back and dragged down the street because of such heavy winds. After Miller bellows "cut!" Nicholson gets up, dusts off his soiled, windblown clothes, and readies himself for another take.

After another scene where Jack is totally surrounded by blown feathers, paper and chairs beside a windblasted truck, the filming crew moved its set up to the Common. There they shot a scene where Jack is blown about again amidst floating debris, only this time he is dragged a good 40 yards along the grass where he ends up in front of the Unitarian Parish Church, another location for the film.

The day of filming has come to "a wrap" and after a quick shower, Nicholson gets a few more handshakes, a few more autographs, and even a couple kisses before driving off in a white cadillac accompanied by a local friend to the place he'll be staying the night.

The following day, filming continued in front of the "Eastwick Central Market" where actress Susan Sarandon makes her appearance in a scene where she bolts out of the market seemingly in a state of paranoia. She is dressed in a long pink gown and her hair is a wild reddish color (like that of a witch).

Yesterday and the day before marked the last couple of days that the filming crew would do work near the center of town. For a lot of people, these past couple of weeks have given them the opportunity to see the sences and say "hi" to their favorite actors particularly Cher, Nicholson, and Sarandon.

"Where's Cher, is she here today?" one lady would say. "I hope Jack's going to be here," said another. "Is that Sue (Sarandon) or it that her double?" For a long time now Cohasset will be referred to as Eastwick and for quite some time people will remember this town as the place where they saw their stars for the first time in person.

It looked like fun for everyone who stopped by for a glimpse whether they were from town or out of state. Sure, it may have been a bother for some whose shops were neglected for continuing their business. But after all, how many times do big name actors and actresses, California plated 18-wheelers, rolling cameras, and big set designs come through a town little as Cohasset? Having a taste of Hollywood come rolling through this summer was indeed a big thrill and especially a "wicked" good time.

Flying Scots excel in three-day district regatta

By James Lyons
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset sailors were well represented at the annual Flying Scot Sailing Association's three day New England District Regatta hosted this year by the Duxbury Yacht Club.

Six Cohasset boats were part of the fleet of 35 that included crews from Marblehead, Harwich Port, Plymouth, Sharon, Duxbury and Ct.

A familiar race course, good winds and expert sailing helped the local Duxbury fleet capture nine of the top ten places. Cohasset sailors were not far behind, however, with respectable finishes in the middle third of the fleet.

Individual standings include: Steve Bartow and crew Bill Lean, Jr., 11th; Ray Kasperowicz and crew Bob Davenport and Tad Kasperowicz, 16th; George Wey and crew Andrew Rossi with Barb Spooner and Peter Chapman alternating, 17th; Peter Goedecke and crew Carl Goedecke and Lisa Clinton, 23rd; Jim Lyons and Gordon Hislop and crew Barb Lyons, 26th.

Misfortune struck Bob Jackson and crew Jeff Bettinger in the third race when their main haylard broke, disqualifying them from the series.

After a quick repair, they came back with superb sailing in Sunday's final race to finish 10th and first among the Cohasset boats.

Soccer camp offers culture

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner

Sixty four Cohasset youngsters had a rare athletic and cultural experience as participants in a soccer camp sponsored by the Cohasset Recreation Department, the Cohasset Soccer Club and North American Soccer Camps Inc.

The camp, coached by four professional British Soccer stars, concluded last week and featured Scotsman Ross Irwin, a graduate of Leeds University, England.

Irwin played professionally with soccer teams in England, Switzerland and in the Bahamas.

He is a director with North American Soccer Camps Inc. and also coaches soccer and downhill skiing at Westwood High School.

Irwin instructed the over 12 age group.

Second year Law Student, Dave Ahern of Lancashire, England coached and amused the under 12 age group. Ahern played professionally with the Lancashire Football Association and represented England in the World Student Games in Yugoslavia in 1985. He also has played professionally with the Middleborough Football Club.

Welchman Jeremy "Taff" Evans, an apprentice soccer professional with the Lampeter City Football Club taught the eight under year old group. Evans a physical education student lives in Dyfed, Wales where he also coaches soccer for the Cardiff District Junior Soccer Club.

Burly Englishman Ian "Staff" Humpage trained the under 10 year old age group. Staff played professionally with the Blackburn Rovers Football Club. Humpage a "keen Red Sox fan" also coaches the Welsh under 13 years old team in his native Lancashire, England.

Sports news

Cohasset Recreation Director, John Worley accepted the enrollments and collected the fees for the program which was held from Aug. 11, to Aug. 16, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. at Milliken Field.

NASC also provided two evening clinics for parents and coaches of soccer. The clinics were offered free to the public.

Recreation summer staff member, Ted Carroll observed the camp for the Recreation Department and helped to supervise the participants.

Cohasset Soccer Club President, Charles DeSantis circulated brochures and developed a group of parents to work with NASC coaches to improve the Soccer Clubs programs.

Awards were given to outstanding campers according to their skill level. Billy Baird won the outstanding camper award for the over 12 year old age group. Chris Kondrat and Jamie Kondrat won the award for the under 12 year old group and under eight year all age groups respectively. Ben Redfield won the award for the under 10 year old group.

NASC operates over 320 camps for youths ages 6 to 18 throughout the Eastern United States. Every NASC coach holds either an English Badge or has an "A" or "B" license from the International Soccer Federation.

The sign-up for the Cohasset Recreation Department Fall Soccer program will be held on Saturday, September 6. Coaches are still needed for this program.

Guild spinning its wheels at Marshfield Fair

By Pam Schancupp
Mariner Staff

During a recent meeting of the South Shore Spinners Guild, fourteen women sat in a circle, talking over the creaky sound of their spinning wheels.

While some women were busy carding and spinning yarn, others knitted and one woman, whose hands were free, sat back and enjoyed the chatter. The guild will demonstrate carding, spinning and weaving every day of the Marshfield Fair in the Women's Exhibition Hall.

Vera Freeman of South Weymouth, who admitted she doesn't knit or weave much, said she comes to the meetings because "it's a fun group."

Freeman said she sometimes shows slides of her travels during the meetings. "When I showed slides of my trip to South America, I included some showings of local costumes," she said.

Sue Freeman of Marshfield said, "I've been knitting since I was a teen. After I got some sheep, I took lessons and I joined the guild," she said.

"Spinning is relaxing. It's more social than watching TV," she said.

Eileen Williams of Marshfield said, "When I moved here in 1976, I thought that spinning was a lost art and there was this woman across the street doing it."

She said her neighbor, Nathalie Corse, taught her how to spin.

"I've been in the guild for ten years. You get to know each other pretty well and do a lot of things together," she said.

The South Shore Spinners Guild was started in 1974, when anticipation of the bicentennial sparked an interest in traditional arts and crafts. A few women who had been taking lessons from Nancy Latady of Norwell began meeting at members' homes.

Guild member Norma Koeppel of Halifax said, "We agreed that it would be fun to spin more than just in class."

But nobody had a living room large enough for everyone (the group included ten people) to sit down with their spinning wheels. The guild rented out a room at the Hingham library before moving to the Second Parish Church in Hingham, where they now meet once a month.

While the group was meeting at the library, it grew to include 35 members. "We were kicked out of the library because they said we were too noisy," said Vera Freeman.

Guild member Jacqueline Fee of Hingham has written a book, The Sweater Workshop, which shows how to make sweaters using measurements rather than patterns.

Williams said, "About half a dozen people in the guild were involved with the book. Some did illustrations and others worked up sweaters to be knit."

Koeppel, who teaches spinning in Halifax and who also belongs to a guild there, said she sometimes will sell the sweaters, shawls and mittens she knits. But most of the women keep their work for themselves, their friends and families.

Although most of the women kept their shoes on while they worked, Sue Freeman pumped her spinning wheel with her barefoot. She slowly pulled a ball of fleece away from the wheel, keeping taut the strand of yarn that wound around the bobbin.

While most of the women use handcards to brush out the sheep fleece before spinning it, Toni Turdell of Hingham used a wooden cutting board and a dog brush to fluff up the fleece and to remove burrs and dirt.

Some of the guild members not only spin, knit and weave, but also raise and sheer sheep and raise and pluck angora rabbits and hand-dye wool.

As 4-H members, some of the women's children take care of the sheep and rabbits.

Koeppel said, "I do a lot of hand dyeing." She said she used the outer shells of black walnuts to make black dye. She makes yellow dye from onions and gold dye from marigolds or goldenrod. Pokeberries are used to get a reddish dye and madder root makes a rust-colored dye. Elderberries will make purple dye.

During the summer, many of the guild members participate in demonstrations and contests at fairs, sheep shows and museums. They held a contest last month at the Governor Winslow House to see who could spin the most yarn in one hour. Throughout the winter, they invite speakers to discuss their craft. Topics have included rare sheep breeds, dyeing and silk spinning. In May, the guild holds a fashion show featuring members' work.

Toward the end of each meeting, the women have a show and tell session. Koeppel, who recently participated in a 'sheep to shawl' demonstration at Barnstable Fair, held up a shawl that she and another woman carded, spun and wove during that fair. One woman passed around a vest that she had made by cutting a sheet into ½ inch strips and knitting the material. Sheila McKenna of Whitman displayed a prize winning sweater that she made for her son. "I told him he has to leave the blue ribbon on when he wears it," she said.

Nantasket Beach Bicycle Race slated for Sept. 1

The eighth Annual Nantasket Beach Bicycle Race, to benefit the Saint Vincent de Paul Society, with assistance from Cohasset Cyclesports, will be held Monday morning, Labor Day, September 1 at 8 a.m.

This race, a 25km (15.5 miles) event tours the towns of Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset. The route is challenging, and filled with New England's coastal beauty. The competitors will ride on excellent pavement, over moderate hills along the shore. In previous years many family teams have participated successfully. Men's winning times are in 35:30 range for the 15.5 mile course. Winning women's times are in the vicinity of 37:30.

This year's race will be the first directed by John Wilkie, the new owner of Cohasset Cyclesports. T-shirts, donated by Cohasset Cyclesports will be awarded to all entrants who pre-register.

Following the race will be the award ceremony. Trophies will be awarded to the first Man, Women, and Veteran (40 and over) finishers. Race winners will again be honored by inscription of their names on the St. Vincent trophy. Gift certificates will also be presented to lucky race entrants who are chosen from a random drawing and free refreshments will be provided after the race for all participants.

The race will begin at 8 a.m. sharp, rain or shine at the M.D.C. parking lot on George Washington Boulevard behind the former location of the Giant Roller Coaster, Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, MA. Check-in and post-registration will be from 6:30 to 7:30 a.m., sharp. Riders are urged to pre-register before Aug. 20, by mail to the address indicated on the race application form. If registration forms are not available at your local merchant, to receive them by mail, please call (617) 383-0707 and leave your name, full address with zip, phone number and how many forms needed.

Refunds will not be allowed due to unsafe equipment. Bicycles must pass the mandatory safety inspection and riders are urged to have their bicycle professionally checked for safe operation before race day. Brakes, tires, running gear, and loose parts will be closely scrutinized. Bicycles that do not pass safety inspection will not be allowed to race, and no exceptions will be made. Protective headgear designed for bicycle racing is also mandatory.

Entry forms for this event may be obtained at your local bike shop or merchant. The entry fee is $10, and the field will be limited to the first 750 entrants. All proceeds benefit the St. Vincent de Paul Society, a non-profit charitable organization which gives help to those in need, especially during the holiday seasons.

For further information contact race sponsor Cohasset Cyclesports days at: (617)383-0707.

'Anything Goes' auditions Aug. 25

Hingham Civic Music Theatre, Inc. will hold open auditions for its fall production of "Anything Goes" Monday and Tuesday, August 25 and 26 at 7 p.m. at the Hingham High School auditorium.

There will be a pre-audition party to meet the directors and hear their plans for the show at the Hingham Community Center, 70 South Street, in downtown Hingham Saturday, August 23, at 7 p.m.

Directors for the show, set to be staged Oct. 23-26 are J. T. Turner, stage director; Salvatore Bartolotti, music director and Valerie Barker, choreographer.

Well-known songs from this smash musical include "Blow, Gabriel, Blow", "I Get A Kick Out of You", "Friendship", "It's Delovely", "You're The Top" and "All Through The Night". Anyone trying out for a principal role should come prepared to sing a number from the show.

The story of "Anything Goes" takes place aboard a luxury liner, the S.S. American, sailing from New York to England. Hope Harcourt, an American heiress, is the ingenue who is engaged to a foppish Sir Evelyn. He is very British and at first glance the epitome of a snob.

His rival for Hope's heart is Billy Crocker, a snappy financial manager who has a smooth style and treats life breezily. Billy hadn't planned to sail, but when he discovers that Hope plans to marry the boob Sir Evelyn, he decides to stay aboard as a stow-a-way and somehow break up the proposed marriage.

Reno Sweeny, ex-evangelist turned to more profitable employment as a nightclub singer, is also aboard with her bevy of "not-so-angelic" Angels Purity, Chastity, Charity and Virtue. Reno is witty, outgoing, sarcastic and has a heart of gold.

The comic of the show is Moonface Martin, public enemy No. 1, who has boarded the liner disguised in clerical black as the Rev. Dr. Moon. Add such characters as Mrs. Harcourt, Hope's social climbing, domineering mother; Bonnie, Moonface's gun moll who wants to be one of Reno's singers; Mr. Whitney, Billy's brash, self-centered boss and the small but important role of Purser, and you set the stage for shenanigans, love and a lot of fun.

Passengers and sailors round out the cast as the chorus in "It's Delovely", "Heaven Hop" and "Blow, Gabriel, Blow" as well as the five dance numbers including tap.

The pre-audition party Saturday, August 23 at 7 p.m., will be followed by a showing of the video tape of last season's successful musical "Kiss Me Kate."

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

CHECKING THE "COMPARABLES"

If you're trying to decide whether or not a particular property is a good investment, you can check what similar homes in the same neighborhood have sold for. This takes a lot of the guesswork out of making the right choice.

Some sales information, such as price, financing terms, and transaction date, is public information. In most areas this is published and can be found in the public library. You can find out how properties have been appreciating based on actual sales experience rather than word of mouth from neighbors (it could be inaccurate) or the hopes of the sellers (they could be very optimistic). Once you have the addresses, you can drive by each home to get some idea of how it compares to the one you're considering. If you're working with an agent, he may have seen the comparables interiors and can give you a clear idea of how they measure up.

If you're considering a move, contact the professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY. Call us at 749-8833 or drop by our offices at 57 Water St., in Hingham.

Historical building plays a major role in film

By David Wadsworth
Senior Curator, Cohasset Historical Society
Special to the Mariner

The summer months of 1986 have seen Cohasset's village and Common briefly transformed into the fictional community of Eastwick, the setting for a moving picture version of John Updike's novel of the supernatural "The Witches of Eastwick".

This summer several of Cohasset's most historical buildings have played a role in or carried the signs of Updike's Eastwick, to the amusement of the town's residents and the occasional confusion of strangers.

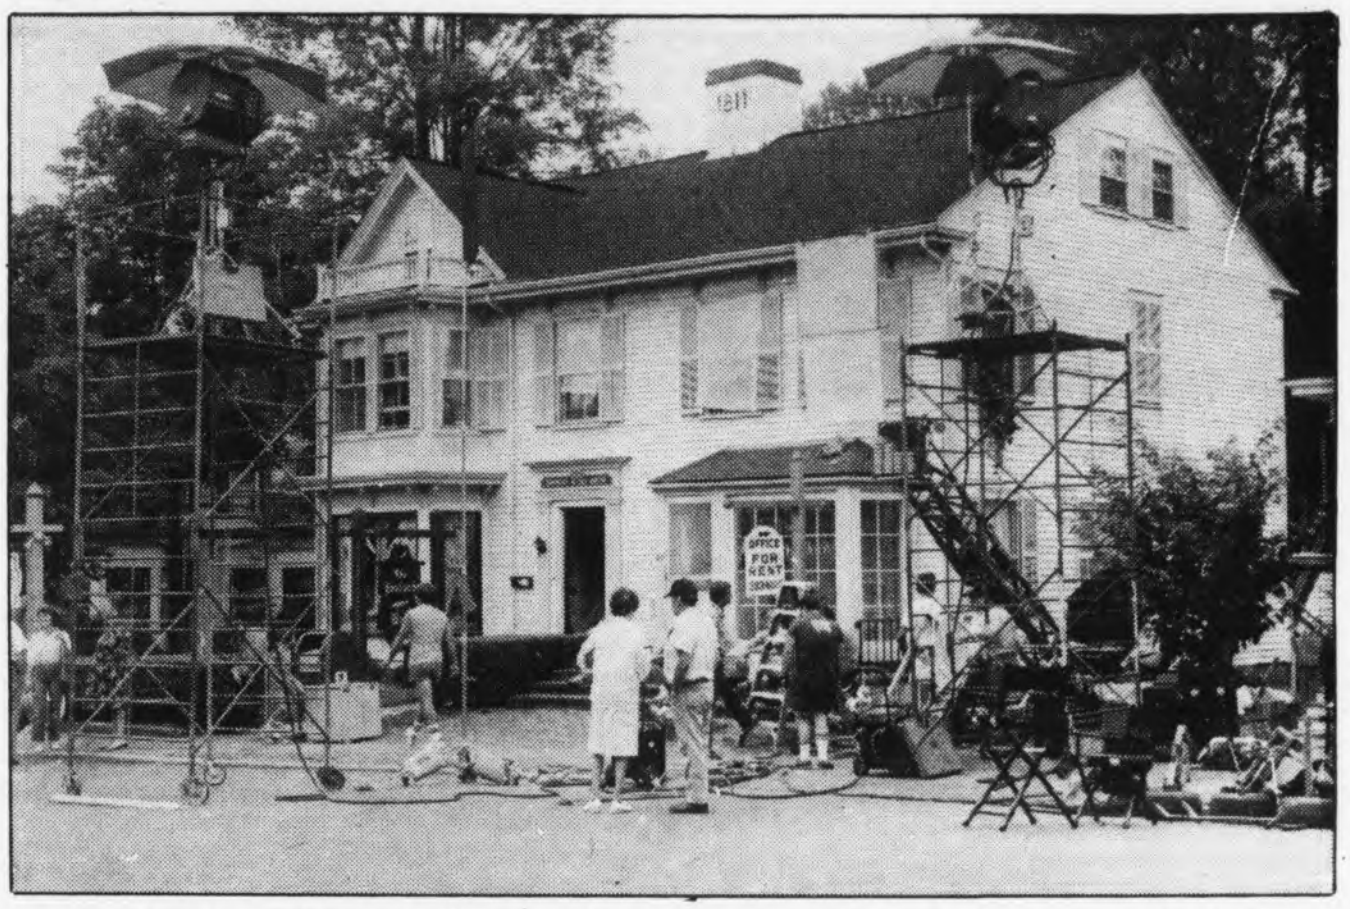
For instance, the tumultuous events occurring in Eastwick's Parish Church were set in Cohasset's preeminant historical building, the old Colonial Meetinghouse on the Common. Constructed in the year 1747 the Meetinghouse originally served both Parish and Government during the era when church and state were nearly one and the same. (In 1747 Cohasset was Hingham's Second Parish and Second Precinct).

The Meetinghouse is perhaps the most visible reminder of the town's Puritan past. Its present steeple was added in the 1790's and the carefully preserved Town Clock, a Howard tower clock with original works still intact, was presented to the town by citizens in the 1850's.

Across Highland Avenue and serving as part of the background for the movie is Cohasset's historic Town Hall. A surviving example of 19th century New England Town Halls, Cohasset's present municipal building was the successor to the Colonial Meeting House as the site of government. Originally constructed in the late 1850's as a combination "Town House" and school building, the Town Hall has been the site for such other community activities as the Public Library and the Historical Society as well as amateur and professional theater companies, and has hosted events such as banquets and fancy dress balls, basketball games and boxing matches. Its cellar once served as the town's jail, presided over by the Lockup Keeper. Cohasset's spacious Common itself dates to earliest Colonial days. It is the remaining part of original undivided Common Land, owned in comon by the town's citizens and reserved for their use. Once stretching from Little Harbor on the north to Cohasset Harbor and Jacob's Meadow on the south, the Common's lower end long ago passed into private ownership but the north part has been preserved intact. Cohasset's is one of New England's most visually striking Town Commons.

As for Cohasset's center village, several of the town's more substantial historic buildings have played action or background roles in the filming of "Witches Eastwick". Doubling for a time as a fictional newspaper office on South Main Street was the Samuel Bates House of 1811. Constructed by one member of the numerous Bates family, the house itself remained in the Bates family through Samuel's son Levi Nichols Bates, then became the home of Edward Everett Ellms, by whose name it is sometimes called.

The 1811 dwelling house also has been the site of a general store, an early drug store, and for many years was the location of the Cohasset Savings Bank, before the bank's brick building on Elm Street was constructed. A bit further along the street is the 1802 home of Samuel Bates' brother Militia Colonel Newcomb Bates. Originally a "half-Colonial" house now much altered, the old home today is the location of a gift shop, and for a while this summer became Eastwick's well known "Deli". The historical name for this house is the "Dr. Bridgham House", for its former owner Dr. Charles Burr Bridgham, a prominent medical Practitioner for many years in post-Civil War Cohasset. Across South Main Street the Hardware Store began its existence in the mid 1800's as Samuel Bates' Tin Shop. Samuel's son Allen C. Bates turned the tin shop into a hardware store, subsequently owned during the early to mid-20th century by William H. McGaw.



More than one historical building has been the focus of a stage setting during the filming of The Witches of Eastwick this summer.

On Elm Street, starting at the junction with South Main, is a line of early buildings which help to give Cohasset's center its particular visual attractiveness. Against the fronts of these early structures some of the action of the movie was played out as a conjured "feather blizzard" roared through the town. First is the Ambrose Nichols House of 1790 now an insurance office with store front added in the early 20th century. From the year 1810 Nichols' next door neighbor was Cohasset Sea Captain John Wilson, whose small but attractive home was built in that year by housewright David Nichols. Today the Sea Captain's home is a museum house owned by the Cohasset Historical Society and holds a large collection of household artifacts from the early homes of the town. The Society's Capt. Wilson House is the surviving example of a primitive dwelling, largely unmodernized and retaining many of its original features. In the movie, the house carries the sign of the Eastwick Historical Museum.

Next door the Society's 1700's ship chandlery, now a Maritime Museum, also forms part of the backdrop. Further along Elm Street a small building, today's Bread Shop is one of the oldest in the center, having been, among other things, Colonel Newcomb Bates' blacksmith shop, Newcomb Bates Jr.'s periodicals store, and in the early years of this century the barber shop of Carlos Tanger. Just behind it and fronting on Main Street, the town's Central Market is another old building, originally the store of Charles Addison Gross and James Hall Nichols then later of Charles H. Trott.

The Eastwickian overlay of Cohasset Center stretches as far as Brook Street, to the Savings Bank whose 1898 classical brick structure is a prominent feature of the village. In its early years the bank's building also was the hall of the Cohasset Chapter of the International Order of Odd Fellows and its ladies' auxilliary the Aurelia Stetson Chapter. Thus the setting for the movie version of Updikes' novel includes some of the town's best examples of early architecture.

It is those buildings plus a number of the town's other structures and areas which have given Cohasset the visual flavor to be chosen as the site of a Hollywood spectacle set in modern New England.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Commuter rail restoration: Update, part II

By every recent measure of public opinion, the great majority of people in the great majority of the 25-odd communities that will be affected by the refurbishment of the former Old Colony Railroad strongly favor the project. But in a very few communities — notably Quincy, Braintree, and Hingham — noisy opposition has arisen to some or all aspects of the plans the state is working up.

The opposition has probably been overreported, especially in the Patriot Ledger, which sometimes reports the loudest Neanderthal imitation at a given public forum as reflecting late twentieth century South Shore homo sapiens. In other words, sometimes the screamers get the headlines.

Nevertheless, serious questions are being asked, questions that must be credibly answered before the project can go forward. The least challenging questions come from Quincy, where a good deal of the opposition seems based on the proposition: "we've got ours; if there's nothing in your proposal for us then to Hades with our neighbors to the south!"

There is, of course, a great deal in the project for Quincy including reduced use of the garage at Quincy Center Station, greatly reduced traffic on the Southern Artery, better air quality, and a possible future rail link to Cape Cod. But the notion, which to a lesser degree is also heard in Braintree, that there has to be "something in it for them" or they will be obstructionist is offensive, particularly so since it was precisely the construction of the Red Line to Quincy and Braintree that obliterated the commuter rail link south and required the rest of Plymouth and Bristol Counties to wait a third of a century between trains.

Quincy does have some legitimate concerns about a transportation mode that will be carrying thousands of people a day through that city. How much landtaking will be necessary? (The answer: little or none.) What effect will deisel locomotives have on air quality? (I expect the environmental impact statement to show that with reduced traffic on Route 3, the Southern Artery, and at Quincy Station, the net effect will be an improvement.)

Turning to Braintree, the chief concern there is the impact on Braintree if Braintree Station is transformed into a commuter rail terminus and/or a joint rail/rapid transit station. If Braintree becomes the terminus of commuter rail (the concept I opposed in last week's column) all commuter rail passengers would have to disembark at Braintree Station and board the Red Line. Aside from the inconvenience to rail commuters, this would clog the Red Line, clog Braintree Station, and since under such a plan stationary deisel locomotives would lay over there for minutes and hours at a time, clog the atmosphere. If this turns out to be the final plan we all ought to oppose it — for Braintree's sake as well as our own.

On the other hand, the plan (which I favored in last week's column) to (1) extend commuter rail service to Boston, and (2) have Braintree or Quincy Adams Station serve as a transfer point between the rail and rapid transit systems, is a plan that could benefit Braintree in a couple of ways. The most important is that by allowing rail commuters from the south to transfer to the Red Line, this plan would encourage all those with destinations short of Boston proper to board a commuter train south of Braintree and thus avoid parking at Braintree or Quincy Adams Station.

For example, the passenger bound from Cohasset to North Quincy would board in Cohasset and transfer to the Red Line by getting off his train and walking across a platform at the common station — hardly an act with much environmental impact. On the other hand, if there is no common tranfer point his choices will be (1) drive all the way from Cohasset to North Quincy, or (2) drive to Braintree or Quincy Adams Station and fill up a parking space. Thus,what Braintree people need to appreciate is that the common station (the state seems to favor using Braintree; I favor using Quincy Adams) will reduce parking at both Braintree and Quincy Adams.

A second way Braintree residents will benefit from the common station will be the access it will give them to the commuter rail system to the south. For reasons I went into last week, Boston-bound commuter trains will not pick up passengers at the common station; but southbound trains will, and this will offer a whole new public transportation option to Braintree residents.

Turning now to Hingham. The chief fear residents there have is that their lovely town will become the dumping ground for out-of-town cars whose owners want to board the train at one of the proposed Hingham stations. This problem must be avoided, and it can be. The first and best way to avoid it is not to make any Hingham point the terminus of the line. That branch must extend through Cohasset to Greenbush; otherwise all Marshfield, Scituate, and Cohasset will be driving up Route 3A to park in Hingham.

Assuming the blunder of a Hingham terminus can be avoided, we will still have to contend with the major problem of Hull commuters. If Hull goes through with building thousands of condominia, most of which house upscale types who commute to Boston, a way will have to be found to steer them clear of Hingham Square. Perhaps they can be prodded on down to North Cohasset; perhaps the old Pemberton branch right-of-way can be used as an ad hoc road to bring Hull people up to the railroad without getting in Hingham's hair. In any event, the Hingham Square Station of the future must be a local one serving local commuters only; other provisions must be found for commuters from the other coastal towns, and until it is, Hingham residents are correct in withholding their support for the project.

Another concern I hear around and about, but especially in the towns along the Greenbush right-of-way where the tracks were pulled up in 1963, has to do with the amount of noise the coming trains will make. No doubt the train does have a rumble — some of us find it thrilling. But for those who find it less than thrilling, it isn't that much louder, really, than the rumble that can be heard on Thursday mornings at the Somerset Club when across Beacon Street at the State House Claire McDonough or Norma Fenochetti has just handed the governor his copy of Politicus. Some weeks, I'm told, the rumble on Beacon Hill is louder than what you'll notice when a train goes by.

Furthermore, the beauty of a train is that it whisks away hundreds of commuters with a single rumble. On the three railroads in question, ten trains times two directions, or twenty rumbles per day, or about 30 seconds worth of rumble per hour, will probably suffice in bringing about enormously improved transportation in 25 different Southeastern Massachusetts communities. The rest of the time the darn thing will be silent! Even at the peak of the rush hour when there may be a rumble every 12 to 20 minutes, the thing will make less noise than Route 3A at 4 in the morning — and far, far less than Route 3 at 4 in the morning. The noise issue, then, even for the direct abutter who may have put a swimming pool 20 feet from the right-of-way, is a non-issue.

I take that back. It is not a "non-issue," for all our citizens' fears are issues that must be answered before you and I can fully support the project. But the noise issue, like most of our people's sincere concerns, are answerable. What is more, the Dukakis-Salvucci transportation team, which sometimes takes heat here for lack of vision, has always been first-rate in working with communities affected by proposed projects. If you are a concerned citizen, an abutter, a business person, or a what-have-you, I urge you to call Pam Wolfe at 482-7880. I guarantee you she will not give you the run-around. She will put you in touch with the top people working on this project. Those people, in turn, will treat your concerns very seriously.

They will even answer your "what's in it for me" question, although they shouldn't have to. The restoration of the railroad will benefit the region, the state, and in a very small way the country — and that ought to be enough for all of us. We've each a right not to be injured by the plan — that's what the environmental impact study is all about. But the notion that the proposal must have "something in it for me" in order to be supported is an abomination. If that is your question I suggest you direct it to the ever tactful Pam Wolfe; for if you direct it to the author of Politicus he will give you an answer that is as short as it is anatomically implausible.

Next week in the final part of the current series I will go over what I see as some pitfalls ahead as we inch toward the construction phase of the project.

Blueberry muffins, clam casserole, & sherbet pie

Among other things, summer spells outdoor parties. Though it seems like tempting fate to plan anything outdoors, we doggedly go ahead with plans for beach parties, picnics, barbecues and backyard pool brunches.

Many a garage is hurriedly swept, many a menu changed to accommodate our steamy, rainy weekends.

Well, no matter where or when, blueberries are always part of the summer scene. Time was when the entire family was rounded up, armed with baskets, or empty two pound Crisco cans and reeking of Citronella, would make tracks for the woods for an afternoon of blueberry picking.

Sometimes we'd eat more than we picked, dump over a half-full basket or lose interest when the sun got too hot, but usually we persisted as we thought of the delights of blueberry pies, pancakes or a muffin, such as these which Patti Conway's grandmother used to make. They're big and fluffy, just like the ones we used to get at Jordan Marsh.

PATTI'S BLUEBERRY MUFFINS

1/2 c. margarine
2 c. flour
1 1/4 c. sugar
2 eggs
1/2 c. milk
2 tsp. baking powder
2 1/2 c. blueberries
1/2 tsp. salt

At low speed, cream margarine and sugar until fluffy. Add eggs, one at time and mix. Sift dry ingredients. Add alternately with milk, Mash 1/2 c. blueberries and stir by hand. Grease muffin tins. Pile mix high in cups. When nearly done, sprinkle with sugar. Bake 25 to 30 minutes at 375°.

To be a true New Englander, a love of clams is a must. Long ago, one of Marshfield's first settlers, Israel Hatch, wrote an ode to the clam. He went on at great length about simmering pots of clams, local officials who should have a care of "our North River clams" and ended his lengthy poem by saying: "Let others seek the marsh to drain — And build their dykes and dams — This, evermore, shall be our strain. . .'We clamor for the clams!' " Sad to say, the river is polluted now and no longer can we dig for clams on the mud flats, but there are always canned clams for a dish such as this

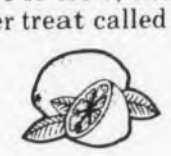
MAINE CLAM CASSEROLE

2 c. clams, with juice
1 c. cracker crumbs
2 T. chopped onions
3 eggs, slightly beaten
1/2 c. milk
1/2 c. cream-style corn
2 T. melted butter
Salt and pepper to taste

Combine ingredients and bake in buttered casserole 45 to 60 minutes at 350°. Serves four.

Several weeks ago we asked for your favorite summertime recipes and thanks to all who answered, I now have recipes for cold soups, quick breads, scalloped scallops, etc. Having them on file is like money in the bank for me and in weeks to come, we'll print them, for surely more hot weather will be along — it always arrives when the children return to school!

However, your recipes are always welcome via the phone, or by mail, Box 25, Marshfield Hills 02051. For now, here is Carolyn Goodnow's easy summer treat called



FROZEN LEMON SHERBET PIE

3 egg yolks
1/2 c. sugar
1/4 c. lemon juice
2 tsp. grated lemon peel
1/8 tsp. salt
1 c. heavy cream, whipped
3 stiffly beaten egg whites
1/2 c. graham cracker crumbs

Beat egg yolks until thick and lemon-colored. Gradually beat in sugar. Add juice, peel and salt. Fold in cream and egg whites. Cover bottom of refrigerator tray with 1/4 c. crumbs. Pour in sherbet mixture. Top with crumbs. Freeze. Makes two quarts.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Madam Zolar offers her astrological forecast

I just received a brochure publicizing classes that are available at local institutions of higher learning for the fall semester, and it occurred to me that my readers may have been similarly gifted. "My stars!" I exclaimed, "they may need astrological guidance. Otherwise we may have an Aries pursuing a career in diplomacy or a Libra aspiring to be a Green Bay Packer."

This, of course, led to a field trip to Madam Zolar's chic little ashram on Third Cliff, where, for what she deemed adequate tuition, Madam imparted the following curricular guidance for all you Zodiophiles out there.

ARIES (March 21 - April 20): As always, you yearn for the opportunity to vent your innate leadership ability, so you should take a course that will prepare you to teach others. Concentrate on learning how to guide the very young or the handicapped. They should be fairly easy to push around, and will allow you to express your dictatorial and domineering nature.

TAURUS (April 21 - May 21): Taureans are skilled at amassing this world's goods, but are reluctant to give up anything they have amassed. This is a fairly classy way of saying you are grasping and stingy. Take courses that will prepare you for a position with the Automobile Insurance Rate-Setting Commission.

GEMINI (May 22 - June 21): Gemini natives are compelling communicators and persuaders. Take a course in public speaking, then use it to get a TV job selling inferior kitchen utensils at inflated prices. If this doesn't work out, try for a position as a Congressional lobbyist.

CANCER (June 22 - July 23): Have I got a course for you Moon Children! Hotel Management. If you can land a job as a hotel executive, you can spend the rest of your life surrounded by the two things you enjoy most — endless supplies of wonderful food and rooms with comfortable, sleep-inducing matresses. Heaven!

LEO (July 24 - Aug. 23): Leos and Leonesses long for unquestioned obedience and total adulation. Since the requirements for employment as Ayatola are fairly specialized, and as there aren't a great many royal princes or princesses available for marriage, you might want to go for a degree in Business Administration, then apply for a position on the Joint Appropiations Commission. The adulation may not be that great, but you get to tell all our government agencies what they can do.

VIRGO (Aug. 24 - Sept. 23): If there's anything Virgos like better than long, tedious lists of figures, it's criticizing people who don't even understand long, tedious lists of figures. Combine your penchants by taking a course in accounting, then look for an opening in the Department of Revenue. Not only will you spend hours at a stretch going over income tax returns, you will also be able to call people on the telephone and tell them what they did wrong.

LIBRA (Sept. 24 - Oct. 23): A Libra's idea of Nirvana is to shop for a living. Fine! Take a class in comparison shopping, then go to work for a consumer advocacy group. Not only will you be able to spend your days wandering through stores, you will also be able to take everything back later, when you decide you bought all the wrong things.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22): Scorpios love a mystery. That's why they won't have time to take any courses this September. They're all too busy as extras in "Spenser" and "The Witches of Eastwick." You won't recognize local Scorpios from reading the credits, though. They even give the TV and movie people assumed names; that's how mysterious they are.

SAGITTARIOUS (Nov. 23 - Dec. 21): Sagittarians are symbolized by the human and half horse Centaur. Although the resulting tendency to sleep standing up makes it difficult to find appropriate motel and airline accommodations, it can be a real plus in certain professions. Take a course in political science, then go for it. Rumor has it that many of the more famous political speeches were made by Sagittarians who were actually sound asleep at the time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20): Be quick to seize this opportunity. With all these people taking courses, there will certainly be a demand for executive-type jobs in the near future. Open an employment agency, then keep all the best leads for yourself.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 - Feb. 19): You, too, can take advantage of this tendency toward continuing education. Go to clown school, and learn how to give your zany, irrepressible nature full play. The United States Senate is now being televised, and your future is unlimited.

PISCES (Feb. 20 - March 20): You will enroll in an assertiveness training seminar, but it will not be an unmitigated success. An Aries will push you around; a Taurus will up your insurance rates; a Gemini will sell you an inferior kitchen utensil at an inflated price; the manager at a hotel where you vacation will be a Cancer who is too busy eating and sleeping to provide you with service; a Leo will raise your taxes; a Virgo who works for the Department of Revenue will yell at you over the telephone; a Libra will beat you to every bargain you see while you are shopping; a Scorpio will get the role you wanted in "Witches of Eastwick;" a Sagittarian and an Aquarian will fight over your vote, a Capricorn who runs an employment agency will charge you lots of money and keep all the best leads for himself. Just the kind of month you love.

NOTE TO ALL SIGNS: Pay no attention to a Sun Sign astrologer who writes for your local newspaper. She is just trying to earn enough money to pay her tuition at clown school.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

In search of the Great White Marlin

Recently, I had the pleasure of fishing in two of the East Coast's most prestigious Billfish Tournaments.

Although Massachusetts waters are not considered to be prime billfish territory, local anglers are mastering techniques and successfully fishing for these great game fish.

As a matter of fact, I think that the waters off the south side of Cape Cod offer a much better fishery than most experts believe exists. The results of recent tournaments attest to the accuracy of my feelings.

The first tournament I fished was the three day Martha's Vineyard White Marline Tournament hosted by the Boston Big Game Fishing Club. Over 40 boats from as far away as Texas competed in this tournament. This was a release tournament which awarded 100 points to each White Marlin which was successfully fought and released.

I was aboard the 32 foot Blackfin yacht, The Fish Hawk, owned and captained by Alex Clark of Norwell. His super fast sportfishing boat is able to keep up with the larger fishing machines and is equipped to handle this game fish. The Fish Hawk's size enables Alex to manuever the boat more quickly to turn on these hard-fighting fish. Two local anglers, Cap Vinal and Dean Hobbs, were also aboard for the tournament.

Each morning shortly after sun-up, our boat powered from the dock in Oak Bluffs and headed to productive spots. Alex searched for water over 68 degrees in at least 20 fathoms of water. Once the appropriate water is located, rods are set in a trolling pattern using a variety of lures which cause surface distortions, imitating the splashing of bait fish. Marlin are attracted from great depths to take these offerings.

The crew constantly scan the waters, searching for fins of fish swimming on the surface. During the first morning a number of fins were sighted. However, upon close examination, they were fins of sharks. Just after 1 p.m., Dean sighted our first marlin and the chase began. Captain Alex maneuvered the boat into position and fresh baits were cast to the marlin.

After many casts, I finally enticed the White Marlin to take my offering. The fish steamed off the bow of the boat, stripping 20 pounds of line from the spinning rod. Although estimated to be in excess of 60 pounds, this fish was quickly beaten by the light spinning tackle, but not before Cap Vinal captured its number of acrobatic jumps on video film. More marlin were sighted during the day but they refused all baits.

The second day of the tournament was extremely foggy, making visual sightings very difficult. The Fish Hawk's crew worked very hard changing lures on the six rods that were trolled. At times, the baits on our longest lines which were only 75 feet behind the boat, were lost in the fog. Dean successfuly baited a large blue shark and fought him on 20 pound spinning tackle until the line parted when it wrapped on the shark's leather-like body.

On the last day of the tournament, our crew fished on Milton Brown's brand new 54 foot Bertram, the Eddie B. This beautiful boat throws a very large wake that attracts billfish and has the ability to fish a wider lure pattern. It is also equipped with a very high tuna tower allowing for tremendous visibility. Milton is a very experienced angler, fishing local waters and Florida waters for billfish, and his expertise is always helpful. Unfortunately, the fog of the day before had settled in and did not want to lift.

Finally, at 3 p.m., the fog opened and allowed for greater visibility. Ed Brady, the Eddie B's captain, spotted two marlin from his perch in the tower and the chase was on. Finally, Dean was able to get the marlin to take his bait. This fish was very strong, running hard and jumping high. Straining the rod to its 20 pound limit, Dean maneuvered the fish to the boat for the release.

Two weeks later I was aboard the Fish Hawk again for the Nantucket's Angler's Club Invitational Billfish Tournament. Joining Captain Clark and me were local realtor Rick Fuller and Tom Storrs from Maryland. Amy Whitt and her mother, Kallie, were also aboard to assist where needed. John Krainin of Norwell, an old friend, was captaining his Blackfin, the Vitamin Sea.

The first day was sunny but quite rough. Early in the morning, John located marlin but had very little success baiting them. However, a little after 11 a.m., two white marlin were spotted. The first fish was hooked but exploded the line. The fish was lost. A second marlin was raised and hooked by John. Assisted by Jack Blake of Norwell, this 70 pound marlin was boated and captured the trophy for first marlin of the tournament.

Unfortunately, our team was unable to hook any marlin, although many were located and baited. A large yellowfin tuna was hooked in 30 Class tackle, but was lost next to the boat when the line parted.

On the second day, many marlin were located but with the abundance of feed, were very difficult to bait.

Wednesday, the third day of the tournament, saw very stormy and windy conditions. This day the crew of the Vitamin Sea joined the Fish Hawk. Captain Jim Smith of Adam's fishing charters also flew into join the team. Fog, rough seas and rain hindered fishing. Most of the 50 boat fleet remained at the dock. During the early afternoon while trolling back to dock, the anglers raised a giant marlin in its bait but were unable to get a hook into the fish.

Thursday was so windy that the crew of both boats decided to remain on shore and go all out for the last day. Friday was beautifully sunny with flat seas. Just before the tournament was to end, the Fish Hawk located two marlin and unsuccessfully attempted to bait these fish. Although the Fish Hawk and the Vitamin Sea fishing teams did not finish on top in this tournament, over 50 marlin were sighted.

Offshore fishing for big game fish such as the white marlin has often been associated as a sport for few wealthy anglers fishing from gigantic ocean yachts.

Our experience shows that mid-size sportfishing boats with appropriate fuel capacity, can compete with much larger boats. Hats off to captains such as John Krainin and Alex Clark who have successfully challenged these fish.

(Bill Smith is the owner of Adams Bait & Tackle, Inc., which carries a complete line of off-shore sportfishing gear. Adams' is located on Route 139, in Pembroke.)

Christo's II presents 'Cole'

To relive the songs of your life as presented by a cast you'll never forget, Christo's II Dinner Theatre of Brockton will present "Cole," the music and lyrics of Cole Porter as the final summer production.

"Cole" will begin Aug. 20 and continue Aug. 21, 22, 28 and 29.

Aug. 27, as a special added attraction, one may see "Cole" in a cabaret setting.

For the special price of $10, "Cole" will be presented at 8:30 p.m. Cocktails will be available. However, dinner will not be served.

Caryl Brayton Toole of Hull is the director/choreographer. "Cole" marks Toole's first Christo's production. However, she is definitely no stranger to theater. She is the director of The Children's Dance Center in Hull. Musical director, Sue Kane, is active on the South Shore with many community theater and colleges.

Frank Piekut, Liz Pietrzak and Robert Bravo of Hingham will be featured in "Cole." Piekut is an active member of Open Door Theatre, Curtain Call Theatre and Hingham Civic Music Theatre. His performances in "1776," and "Equus" have been critically acclaimed. "Cole" marks Liz Pietrzak's fourth Christo's production, most recently appearing in "Not Now, Darling." Bravo toured Washington, D.C., New York and Europe with chorale groups performing Verdi's Requiem.

Glenn Hochkeppel of Cohasset returns to Christo's for his second season. Hochkeppel has been seen on Cohasset stages in "Godspell," "Pirates Of Penzance," and "Snoopy." Curtain Call Theatre audiences will recognize him for his outstanding peformance in "1776."

Welcome Back to School - 1986

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

When students return to Cohasset High School September 4, they will find that the same old place has a brand new face or two.

The administration has been reshuffled, with Mary Ellen Gallagher assuming the principal's post and John DeLorenzo taking over as assistant principal.

"I think that generally, students are very flexible," commented Superintendent-to-be Stephen Hart. "They really respond quite well to change and I'm sure they'll not find things all that much different.

He noted, a number of students affected by minor schedule changes have been visiting with guidance counselors for the last two weeks.

The curriculum, Hart said, basically will follow the same pattern in the same fashion as in previous years.

"One of the things we'll be doing this coming year," he said, "is taking a look at the reading curriculum at the elementary level."

With declining enrollment at the high school, Hart explained, the administration will seek out "ways we can continue to offer the wide range and variety of courses with the smaller population.

"Cohasset does have quite a variety of course offerings," he said.

While a population decline has affected the secondary level overall, Hart explained, "We pretty much have a stabilized population at the elementary level."

Furthermore, with 84 registered kindergarteners, that program shows slightly higher numbers from over the last few years.

The only addition to Cohasset's academic arsenal was that of an after-school child care program, which will begin the first day after school, will cover students in grades one through six.

Despite the myriad of personnel changes, Hart pointed out, "There really haven't been any major revisions in the curriculum this past year.

"I think that basically what we've offered," he

New school superintendent ready to take over the education helm

By Stephen Hart
New School Supt.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my hope that all of our students and parents have had an enjoyable and productive summer season.

It does not seem possible that the summer is drawing to an end so quickly and that shortly we will be opening school for the 1986-1987 academic year.

A sure sign of the end of the summer season is the increasing number of students and staff that have begun to visit the Joseph Osgood, the Deer Hill and the Junior/Senior High Schools.

Although both students and staff express concern about the imminent opening of school, it is not difficult to see behind this veneer of protestation and to uncover their feelings of excitement and anticipation as the school season approaches.

From a personal perspective, this is of course a truly exciting time for me as I approach the beginning of my tenure as Superintendent of your schools. My excitement is a result of my belief that given the continued support of the community, School Committee, parents, students, and most importantly, the school staff, I will be able to continue the tradition of your excellent educational system which, in its quest for excellence, has never lost sight of the idiosyncratic needs of our student population.

My optimism is continually supported by the knowledge of the capabilities of our instructional staff with which I have had the pleasure of being associated for the past sixteen years. Their boundless enthusiasm for new ideas and their unrelenting effort to implement and support the policies of the School Committee and the administration allow me to feel confident that the excellence of our educational program will continue and, in fact, be strengthened even in the face of the challenges that we are certain to encounter.

I would like at this point to extend my best wishes and sincere appreciation to two members of our school system who are retiring from public education. The outgoing Superintendent of Schools, Mr. Eugene Crowell, has devoted more than thirty years to education and during his six years in Cohasset has always had as his first priority the well-being of our students.

Mr. Gino DiGirolamo has retired from public education after more than twenty-five years of service to young people, the vast majority of his time was spent in Cohasset as a teacher, department head, and assistant principal. The dedication of both of these fine men will be greatly missed, but their legacy to our youth will be enduring.

The enrollment at the elementary schools has stabilized at approximately eighty students per grade level. In order to maintain a per pupil ratio of 20-25 to 1, we have added an additional teacher at the grade 3 level. Mrs. Marie Davis has been hired to teach at the Osgood School and Mrs. Kathleen Whitley will be returning to the Deer Hill School after a leave of absence in the Peace

Colonial Pharmacy owner continues to win court battle

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Attorneys for Stop & Shop Co.'s have appealed a Norfolk Superior Court decision prohibiting them from selling prescription drugs below cost.

Ralph Harrison, owner of Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy, filed an unfair sales complaint about two years ago, alleging that Stop & Shop was trying to drive his pharmacy out of business by selling prescription drugs below cost at its Medi Mart store on Route 3A.

Judge B. Joseph Fitzsimmons handed down a preliminary injunction against Medi Mart July 25. Fitzsimmons upheld his ruling Aug. 14, after Stop & Shop asked for reconsideration of the decision.

Stop & Shop then filed for a full court appeal in Appeals Court and asked for a single justice stay of the injunction until the case is decided by the Appeals Court. Hearing dates have not yet been set for the two actions.

"It's a case where they were trying to drive a small business out of business," said Harrison. "They've been doing it for years, but nobody had the resources to take them to court.

"If you're driven out of business, it isn't too likely you'll have the money to go to court," he said. "Fortunately, I had the resources."

Harrison's attorney, Mark DeGiacomo of the Boston firm Roach, Carens and DeGiacomo, said that the case involved a seldom used Massachusetts statute that prohibits selling below cost. (G.L.c.93 sec 14F)

"The case deals with a Massachusetts statute

A $25,000 bonus from Hollywood

John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

The town received a very nice thank you note from Warner Bros. this week—and a $25,000 check.

Don Levy, publicist for the Witches of Eastwick, presented the check to selectmen Monday night in appreciation of the town's cooperation in the filming of the movie.

"This was not like filming on location," Levy said. "This was like going to someone's home and visiting with friends.

"We all felt very comfortable here," he said. "Because of that Warner Bros. wanted to go beyond the traditional thank you."

Levy read a letter from the film's producer, Neil Canton, and Director George Miller expressing their appreciation to the town.

"With our location work nearly complete and Cohasset returned to Cohasset, it gives us great pleasure to express our gratitude not only to the town's leadership, but to all those who call Cohasset

Lead paint warning

Parents should be aware of the risk of their youngsters being poisoned by lead paint, says Public Health Nurse Mary Anne Hansen.

Hansen offers a free test for lead in children's blood, and plans a free clinic in October.

"We recently had a two-year-old, a four-year-old and an eight-year old child test positive for lead in the fingertip test," said Hansen. "Fortunately they were all found to be okay after a venous sample was taken.

"Little children love to put their fingers in their mouths," she said. "It's easy for kids to get lead in their systems."

"It's important that people realize that there is lead paint in many homes," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "It goes down layers and layers. Children can ingest chipping or peeling paint."

The Social Service League sponsored a lead testing clinic in the spring, but Hansen was disappointed in the low turnout.

"Apparently people view it as a ghetto problem," she said, "but there's a lot of lead paint in many of the older homes in town."

Hansen and the Social Service League plan another clinic in October. The painless test consists of drawing a little blood from a finger.

If the test proves positive, a larger blood sample from a vein is tested.

For further information on lead testing, call Hansen at the town health office or at the Social Service League of Cohasset, 383-0771.

Bridge extension approved

Selectmen gave the J.M. Cashman company an extension to Sept. 20 to complete work on the Border Street and Cunningham Street bridges.

The board reserved the right to assess damages against the company for any additional costs associated with the extension, including additional engineering or equipment rental fees.

"This is a case where the movie people interrupted their work," said Selectman Rocco Laugelle. (Highway Surveyor) Harold Litchfield feels we should give them the extension."

Executive Secretary Donald Andrew said that the company was interrupted for eight working days, from Aug. 6 to Aug. 15, when Warner Bros. was filming scenes for The Witches of Eastwick in town.

Andrew said that Warner Bros. compensated the company for the lost time, and said that town counsel recommended reserving the right to assess damages for cost overruns.

"There may be some additional costs incurred, but I strongly feel that we should not bear those costs," said Selectman Chairman Diane Sullivan. "The construction company was reimbursed by Warner Bros."

The $160,000 project was to have been completed by Aug. 29.

New traffic signs

New traffic warning signs will be placed on two streets that have dangerous situations.

Selectmen approved placing a "Slow—Children" warning sign at three locations: the intersection of King and Pond Streets; across the street from 308 King St., and at 241 Jerusalem Road.

Selectmen received requests from citizens for the signs, and Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield approved the requests.

However, the board noted that the annual sign budget is only $1,000, and that citizens should only make truly necessary sign requests.

A "20 mile per hour" warning sign already exists in the vicinity of 241 Jerusalem Rd., and selectmen debated whether to place the "Slow—Children" sign in the area.

"While this request is important, the next requests could be more important," said Chairman Diane Sullivan. "However, I hate to deny anyone a request, especially when (the highway surveyor) has recommended it."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle made a motion to replace the existing sign with the warning sign, but that motion was not seconded. Laugelle then seconded James Gallagher's motion to include both signs, but warned that the town is receiving too many sign requests.

"I will second the motion," said Laugelle, "but this business with the signs has got to slow down."

Milliken Field funds

A complete set of design plans is needed before improvements can be made to Milliken Field, a Milliken Field improvement committee member told selectmen this week.

Selectmen Monday supported a $16,761 reserve fund transfer request by the committee to complete the plans.

Committee member Kenneth Ekberg said that the $20,000 appropriated by town meeting would not cover the cost of the plans, and that the transfer was necessary to complete the drawings.

"Selectmen made it very clear to us that the board wanted a full set of drawings," said Ekberg. "We need the plans for there to be any actual construction."

The improvement committee must now take their transfer request to the advisory board for approval. The advisory board must approve all reserve fund transfers.

Ekberg said the committee is attempting to solicit money from private donors to help pay for the construction phase of the project. He roughly estimated the cost of construction to be around $550,000.

"It's very difficult to raise private money without a complete set of drawings," he said. "The range of private contributions could be from zero to considerable, but contributors want to see a committment from the town."

"We have a situation where playing fields used by both recreational groups and our athletic teams are in definite need of repair," he said. "It's not a situation of maintenance."

Ekberg said improvements would include renovations to Milliken Field's playing surface for soccer, field hockey and football; reconstruction of the track; a new drainage and irrigation system; fencing and landscaping; and the relocation of a water pipe that runs under a corner of the field.

Future improvements could include lighting, aluminum bleachers, and the relocation of a baseball field to create more playing space.

Selectmen Rocco Laugelle and James Gallagher voted to support the transfer, but Diane Sullivan voted against it.

"Next year we will be faced with town hall and police and fire station renovations," Sullivan said. "I realize (field improvements) are important, but there are things I consider more important.

"The police and fire station's gutters are rotting," she said. "It's an emergency situation there."

which provides that it is illegal for a retailer to sell goods below what that retailer has paid for them," said DeGiacomo.

"The statute appears not to be used too much," he said. "This case is significant in that we have used the statute."

Stop & Shop sold the 64-store Medi Mart chain to Walgreen Co. of Deerfield, Ill. in May. Stop & Shop spokesman Sandra Bouzoukis said the company is apealing the decision to clear the record.

"We're asking the court to reconsider the action because we're no longer in the drug business," said Bouzoukis. "We do want to clear the record."

DeGiacomo said that the decision as written would apply to any company that operates the Medi Mart chain.

"It is our interpretation that the decision would bar anyone who owns Medi Mart from selling below cost," he said. "The decision is not limited to just the Cohasset store. It applies to all the Medi Marts.

"We have alleged that they would go into an area and sell prescription drugs below cost," said DeGiacomo, "and eventually destroy their competition. After the competition was harmed, they would raise their prices back to what they would normally charge.

"In the meantime, the store was able to survive because of the support of its sister stores (in the chain)" DeGiacomo said.

DeGiacomo noted that the area of prescription drugs is especially susceptible to the practice of selling below cost.

"People are attracted by the low prices initially," he said, "and they have their prescriptions filled there. When the prices go up, they tend to keep on filling their prescriptions at the same place.

"People aren't likely to change where they get their prescriptions filled," said DeGiacomo.

Bouzoukis said that Stop & Shop never sold drugs below cost.

"We've maintained all along that we were not selling below cost," said Bouzoukis. "It's not a good business practice."

Spensley Chevrolet missing Rusty Jones

If you spot a man 15-feet tall, made of vinyl, and who answers to the name Rusty Jones, Spensley Chevrolet wants to hear from you.

Phil Irizarry said Spensley Chevrolet is offering a $250 reward for the recovery of a $6,000 balloon in the likeness of Rusty Jones, which was swiped on or about the evening of August 17.

"It was easy to take," Irizarry said. "They just had to disconnect the power source, deflate the balloon and pack it away.

He said he believes the theft was "most likely a prank. We'll probably see it on a local football field this fall.

"If it were malicious mischief," he explained, "they probably would have just ripped it up right there."

Irizarry said the balloon was lifelike "down to his shoelaces.

"There's a joke going around the shop," he said, "that Rusty was kidnapped and is being held for ransom."

Police are investigating the incident.

Selectmen's action

The board voted to grant a one-day liquor license to the George H. Mealy American Legion Post for a Sept. 13 clam bake on Sandy Beach.

Also, the board approved a request by the Cohasset Baptist Church to use the town common or town hall for a Sept. 5 concert. The board will allow the church to use the town common for the concert if necessary on Sept. 15, but town hall is being used for the selectmen's meeting that night.

Landfill can apply for groundwater discharge permit

By John Black
Mariner Correspondent

After years of stalemating some movement has finally been made in Cohasset Heights Ltd.'s battle with the Board of Health.

CHL has been granted permission to apply to the Department of Enviormental Quality Engineering for a groundwater discharge permit, providing the company can iron out remaining legal wrinkles in time for the board's meeting, scheduled for September 8.

The controversy between the two groups centers around the treatment and disposal of the landfill's collected leachate run.

When water percolates through a landfill, organic chemicals, metals, and other contaminants are dissolved from the decomposing waste in a process known as leaching, much as coffee dissolves from the grounds in a drip coffee maker. The contaminated water, or leachate, moves downward through the bottom of the landfill.

Currently the contaminated waste is collected and driven to a Lawrence sewage treatment plant. The landfill's owners, John and Paul Barry, want to save money by building a facility to treat the runoff at the landfill itself, before discharging it into the groundwater.

Such a facility, costing $1.5 million would treat the released water to the board's required level of purification.

GHR, engineers for the commercial landfill, were able to show the boardmembers evidence that the area's groundwater flow will carry the discharged water away from the town's drinking supply and into the Great Swamp area.

This had been the greatest concern to officials: protection of the town's water supply.

Anton Moehrke, lawyer for the CHL, announced plans to procede with a legal action against the state Department of Public Works (DPW) to take their share of responsibility in paying for the treatment facility.

GHR believe they can prove that the DPW is responsible for approximately two-thirds of the site's leachate contamination. The DPW has stored road salt at the site adjacent to Cohasset Heights for many years.

Realizing that such a legal battle could take years, Moehrke and board of health lawyer, Michael Leon are spending the upcoming week considering contingency plans.

One plan under consideration would require CHL to put up a bond for $750,000 now and the rest in a years time if they court battle is still unsettled.

In other actions the board accepted a bid from the Profence Company of Wilmington to build a fence around the town's Cedar Street landfill. The fence, measuring 600 feet long by 10 feet high, will cost the town $4,360.

Also discussed were plans to publicize the need for lead screening tests for children. There have been three recent cases of lead poisoning the board chairman Dr. Michael Bliss wants parents to be more aware of the problem. "Children put things into their mouths. It's natural. And lead tastes sweet to kids, so they'll eat it again if they get the chance." Bliss favors a yearly routine check-up for young children.

Neer chairman of Art Center fundraising

Mrs. N. Frank Neer Jr. of Cohasset has been named chairman of the South Shore Art Center's capital campaign committee, organized to raise the funds for the Center's new facility.

Mrs. A. Werk Cook of Cohasset is the Honorary chairman. Working with Mrs. Neer on the committee Mrs. Edward F. Logan, chairman of the individual gifts and Mrs. Thomas B. Williams and Stan Nikkel, co-chairman of board gifts. The capital campaign committee has begun its efforts to raise the $950,000 for its new facility to be located in Cohasset on Pleasant Street just around the corner from its present location at 103 Ripley Road.

The committee has raised $500,000 including a matching grant of $150,000 from the South Shore Playhouse Associates.

The need for a new facility became apparent as the Center began to outgrow its present site. The new 8,000 square foot facility will house four large studio/classrooms with better teaching facilities, a central two-story gallery space with professional exhibit lighting, a gallery/members room for community functions, an expanded gift shop to provide a professional outlet for local artists and craftspeople, more storage space and improved administrative offices.

Discussing plans for a new South Shore Art Center facility are Mr. and Mrs. William Vanderweil and Mr. and Mrs. Francis Mahoney of Hingham.

said, "is a very strong academic program.

"Our challenge," Hart explained, "is to continue with that despite some of the demands that are going to be placed upon us because of the declining enrollment at the secondary level."

Pressure may be poured on by the state Dept. of Education, which will be militant this year in the form of scholastic review.

Hart explained, "The provisions of chapter 188 of the Education Reform Law are still being implemented. The new provisions will come into effect this year."

Under the new law, the state agency will become involved in an assessment program; it will evaluate school districts throughout the state.

"And of course, they will also be taking a greater role in basic skills testing," Hart said. "They'll actually be scoring the tests and returning them to the schools with the results."

Though many school committees and administrations might consider the state intrusion unjustified, Hart commented, "We look positively on these developments.

"We hope we'll be able to gain information from this that's helpful," he said. "We expect that Cohasset will do well, because of our student population and because of our strong academic program."

Hart noted another down side to chapter 188. "There's been a great deal more paperwork and involvement by the administration in the provisions of chapter 188, and that will continue."

He added, he hopes it won't be a strain on the new staff.

"We hope that we'll be able to deal with it," he said." We have so far."

Hart concluded, "On a personal note, I'm excited because I've been with the system for a number of years, and I'm very aware of the capabilities of the people who work here, the teachers and staff.

"So, I look forward very positively to the coming year. I hope the students come back with a great deal of enthusiasm, and I hope they all experience a very productive year.

"I think they'll find that enthusiasm on the part of the teachers and other staff in the school," he said, "and working together, we'll all have an excellent year."

home," the letter said.

"We signify this by presenting you, the Selectmen of Cohasset, this check which we give to the Town of Cohasset to be expended to the benefit of all the people of Cohasset as the Selectmen may determine," said the letter.

Selectmen said they will determine how to spend the money in the next several weeks. The board praised the cast and crew of The Witches of Eastwick, and commended citizens and town employees.

"It was a class operation," said Chairman Diane Sullivan. "It was a lot of fun, and I think there were very few complaints from citizens—less than one percent of the town's population."

"It was very easy to live in town with the movie going on," said Selectman James Gallagher. "I'd certainly vote to have them again."

"I just can't say enough about the way Warner Bros. cooperated with the town," said Selectmen Rocco Laugelle. "Also, the police, fire department and all the town employees did a great job."

Canton and Miller wrote that people won't be disappointed with the town's partcipation in the film.

"We know that you will be both proud and pleased with Cohasset's starring role," they wrote." . . . We spent this summer with you, creating what we regard as one of next year's most important films, a film that we can all watch with pride."

The town will keep the large "Eastwick Town Hall" sign that adorned town hall during the filming as a souvenir of the production.

Water Dept. vandalism

The summer of 1986 has brought a flood of trouble to the water treatment plant on King Street.

Recently, someone tried to drive a car through a metal fence at the facility. It is one of many incidents in a summer string of vandalism.

Water Dept. Supt. Benjamin Curley said most of the damage has occurred on Friday and Saturday nights and he attributes the acts to "partyers blowing off a little steam."

In another incident, vandals ripped down two trees to their trunks, limb by limb, Curley said.

Earlier in the year, the plant incurred $600 worth of damage when someone saw fit to smash five large pane thermoglass windows.

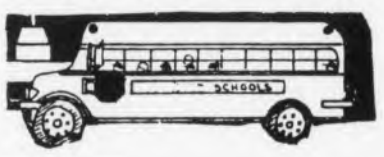
"We've taken steps to increase security here," Curley said. "And although it's a hard area to patrol, the police have been very good about coming by."

Bus routes for 1986-1987

Osgood School students and the Deer Hill students will be bused separately this year. The Deer Hill students, (grades 4-6), will be picked up at their route stops beginning at 7:55a.m.

They will arrive at Deer Hill at 8:20a.m. and school will begin at 8:25a.m.

The Osgood route pick ups, (grades K-3), will begin at 8:25a.m. students arriving at school at approximately 8:40 and school will begin at 8:45.



Greetings from Hart. . .

Corps. Mrs. Patricia Murphy, a long-term substitute at the Deer Hill School during the past year will be the new fifth grade teacher.

At the Junior/Senior High School, Ms. Mary Ellen Gallagher has assumed her position as Principal and Mr. John DeLorenzo has been named Assistant Principal. Joining the Business Education Department on a part-time basis will be Mrs. Geraldine Greene, and Mrs. Susan McFadd has been named as Librarian to replace Mrs. Elizabeth Glasfeld who has relocated to Connecticut.

The position of Elementary Adjustment Counselor has been established and Mr. Edward Leonard, a certified adjustment counselor and former guidance counselor at the Junior/Senior High School will assume that position in September. The need for this position has been discussed in depth at the time of the budget hearing and was supported by a large, cross section of the community.

An after-school day care program has been developed by the school system to provide child care from the end of school to 6 p.m. for those parents who are in need of such a service. We will also continue to implement the regulations of Chapter 188, the Public School Improvement Act.

During the past school year, the Town of Cohasset accepted the $18,000 minimum salary provision of this Act as well as the Professional Development Grant.

School Improvement Councils were established at both elementary schools and the funds available to the councils were used to purchase new recreational and fitness equipment at the Deer Hill School while at the Joseph Osgood School, they were used to establish curriculum enrichment centers within the school.

During the 1986-1987 school year, the School Improvement Councils will expand to include the Junior/Senior High School.

Another provision of the act provides supplemental funds to school districts under the auspices of the Horace Mann Grants. These funds will be used to encourage additional curriculum review projects by our teaching staff.

At the Junior-Senior High School, we will be facing the challenge of maintaining the diversity of our school program in the face of declining enrollment. While this undoubtedly will be a difficult task, it will provide us with an opportunity to propose innovative alternative plans which, while dealing with the reality of student enrollment, will also allow the opportunity of providing exciting alternatives to our student body.

I look forward to working with all of you during this coming school year which I hope will be a very enjoyable and productive one.

School Committee chairman offers his new year views

By Joseph Nedrow, Ed.D
Special to the Mariner

On behalf of the Cohasset School Committee, I would like to welcome all of our students and staff to the opening of the 1986-87 school year.

This will be a year of transition for our school system as we begin the year with both a new Superintendent of Schools, Stephen Hart, and a new High School Principal, Mary Ellen Gallagher.

The increasing expectations that have been placed on public education during the 1980's will undoubtedly make their task a difficult one as they assume, in the first instance, the responsibility of the overall administration of school departments, and in the second, operation of a comprehensive grade 7-12 junior/senior high school.

I am certain that they both bring to their respective positions the administrative skills, enthusiasm and dedication that will ensure success in their endeavors as they strive to improve the educational opportunities for the students in the Cohasset Public Schools.

During the year, the School Committee will be keenly interested in the continuing review of the curriculum offering both at the elementary and secondary school levels.

This review will be particularly critical at the secondary level where there continues to be a decline in enrollment while at the same time the needs of our students for a diverse and stimulating educational experience remain.

With the support of the community, I am sure that we will continue to be able to offer our students the quality of education which has enabled them to be successful both in college placement and in the world of work.

The continued implementation of Chapter 188, the Public School Improvement Act of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts will be a major emphasis of both the School Committee and the school administration.

The School Improvement Councils, which were implemented at the elementary level during the 1985-86 school year, will be expanded during this year to include the Junior-Senior High School. Teachers, administrators, parents and citizens will be invited to serve on the Council which will have as its major change the determination of how the funds made available to it can be best utilized at the secondary level to provide additional educational opportunities to our students.

This provision, along with others such as the Horace Mann Grant, will be a major concern of the School Committee during this upcoming year.

The School Committee and the school staff invite your active support for one of your most important assets, your Public School System.

☐ Heard from Ann Crawford recently, and am happy to report that she is all settled in her new home in Ocala, Florida. The weather has been hot, but she sure has seen a lot of sun! At this point it would seem like a mirage to us . . . anyway, she says hello to all, and would love to hear from Cohassetites. Her new address is: 7196-D Sunningdale Drive, Ocala, Florida 32672.

☐ If you see Pat Laugelle around town, I'll bet that she is smiling even more than ever. Pat reached her "milestone" birthday a few weeks ago, and all of her friends got together a huge suprise party to honor the event. Be sure to ask Pat for details, they do throw the grandest parties!

☐ Another noteworthy birthday must be recognized. Irma Bates has August 27 circled, she will be 90 years old on that day. A very happy birthday from all of us to you!

☐ Congratulations are sure in order for Mike Brady, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Brady of 15 Brewster Road. Mike just learned that he has been accepted to Virginia Poly Tech Graduate school, where he will be enrolled in the Materials English Graduate Program. All of your hard work paid off Mike and we're proud of you. Certainly have done great things with your life after you left teaching all of us how to play tennis . . .

☐ If you see a lot of CHS students looking a little "green around the gills" this week, not to worry. Its not the flu, its fall sports underway, beginning with double sessions. Here's to successful seasons for all, and begin to plan now so that you can lend your support by attending their games.

☐ Here's hoping that Vivian McCormack is recouperating nicely as she reads this. She is a patient at South Shore Hospital.

☐ Hearty congratulations to William and Susan Carter on the birth of their daughter. She was born Aug 6 at South Shore Hospital.

☐ Bobby Shultz, Dan Camardo, and Jamie Roy are among the first of last year's grads to start off for their first year in College this week. We wish them the best of luck, and hope to hear from them during the coming year.

☐ Everyone is still talking about the grand party held by the Chamber of Commerce to say farewell to The Witches of Eastwick cast and crew. A grand time was had by all, and the month of filming won't soon be forgotten! Especially since its on film for all to see!

☐ Don't forget that if you want to buy any of the yummy bread, rolls or pastries at the Bread Shop, you will have to wait until Sept. 2. The Bread Shop Staff is taking a well-earned vacation until then, so we will just have to suffer in silence.

☐ Best of luck to Lynn Pompeo, Kate Anderson, and Anne O'Leary as they depart to their first year of College life. Hope you all have a grand year, we sure will be thinking about all of you!

☐ Welcome to Mr. John M. LeLorenzo, who was selected as the new Assistant High School Principal last week.

☐ A week from today is "D-Day" for Moms . . . no more hearing I'm bored," or "what can we do now," its off to school for one and all. All moms can be found at Sandy Beach, for you all know that the weather will be hot and sunny for at least two weeks!

☐ It was a pretty sight last Saturday to see everyone dancing and looking so lovely at the Cohasset Historical House where the new Mr and Mrs. Murphy were celebrating their wedding! Beautiful bride, attendants, family, and the only sunny Saturday we've had in over a month. Sarah (Abbruzze) was just as they describe in the books, "radiant" and David looked extremely proud . . . Sarah's sister Michele and her family came from Italy to help celebrate the event. A long and happy life for the new bride and groom.

☐ Mr. and Mrs. John Cornish Nott announce they will again hold Dance Party Classes at St. Stephen's Church from Sept. 30 until Dec. 2.

The classes are held Tuesday evenings for sixth and seventh grade boys and girls from Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham and surrounding communities.

The general chairman this year is Mrs Charles Pyle.

Class chairman are Sixth grade boys, Mrs. Susan Fiore; sixth grade girls, Mrs. Tim Schrann; seventh grade boys, Mrs. John Suhrbier; seventh grade girls, Mrs. Russell Reidy; and Derby Acadmey, Mrs Zigmunt Pozatek.

For further information or questions, please contact one of the class chairmen.

☐ The Cohasset Community Center will be sponsoring a junior-senior high dance Saturday, Sept. 6 from 8 to 11 p.m. at the Town Hall. Admission is $3 per person.

☐ Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Healy announce the birth of a new grandson, Jason Thomas Walter Benterou, son of James and Susan Benterou of Pleasonton, Calif.

Jason was born July 17 and the paternal grandparents are John and Jane Benterou of San Leandro, Calif.

Jay Jay Healy and her cousin Betty Maree recently visited Jason to assist with the babysitting chores and report that everyone is doing very well.

☐ That's the news from here, be sure to send your news this way. A lot of students away from home love to read about themselves or their friends, so let us know what's new with you . . .

VoTech adopts new policy for 18-year-olds

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Students who are 18 years old or older will no longer be able to sign their own absence notes at South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School.

The regional school committee last week unanimously approved a new policy that requires 18-year-olds to have a note from an adult to verify absences or to request early dismissal from school.

"It's an attempt to promote a little more responsible behavior," said School Superintendent Clifford Easton. "We're trying to teach responsibility here."

Massachusetts law holds that once a student has reached the age of eighteen, he or she is considered to be an adult and is able to enter into contracts and sign legal documents.

However, a letter to high school principals from the legal office of the state department of education said that whether or not a school accepts the signature of an 18-year-old on his own absence notes depends on the purpose of the school rule for the notes.

If the purpose of the rule is to obtain the signature of a guardian, the student can sign his own notes, since he is his own guardian and is an adult.

However, if the purpose of the rule is to verify the absence by somebody with knowledge of the student's whereabouts, the student could not sign his own note.

School committee member Breida McDonough of Scituate, a 1985 graduate of the school, pointed out that the new policy allows another student 18 or older to sign the note.

"I agree that signing your own notes is an abused privilege," said McDonough, "but I don't think (the new policy will help.

"The signer can be another student," she said. "You'll get two kids signing each other's notes."

Easton said that he could not prevent students from signing for one another, but added that the school could take action if the signer did not in fact know where the absent student was.

Easton said he expects some students to protest the new rule, but that the school's position isn't likely to change.

"If you want to be a productive citizen, or a productive protester, you have to learn the rules of the road and live with them before trying to change them," he said.

"We get protests for everything," said Easton. "The kids make it a contest. I don't have a problem with kids who don't like the rules, as long as they work within them in trying to get them changed."

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

Home Center Realty

SHOULD YOU REMODEL OR MOVE?

You're family has outgrown your home, but you love the neighborhood and schools, and you've established roots that make it hard to move. Is remodeling the solution.

Before you jump into a major renovation project, get some professional advice. First, decide what changes you want to make and contact several contractors for bids. Once you get some idea of the costs involved, ask your Realtor if your plans would over-improve the house for the neighborhood, making it impossible for you to get your money back if you must resell anytime soon. Talk to friends who have remodeled their homes in order to get a true picture of what you might expect in dealing with contractors. Can the work be completed around your family? How disruptive will it be to your lives and for how long? Remodeling a home is a major undertaking, and may not be the best solution to your space needs.

Slip-slidin' away

It used to be school permission slips were synonomous with field trips to the zoo or to some newspaper plant.

Have we reached the point of absurdity when athletes and their parents are forced to sign an "athletic permission slip," agreeing that students will refrain from using drugs or alcohol during the playing season of their competitive sport.

"Athletes must sign no-drugs promise" - This was the headline in Tuesday's Patriot Ledger which described the vote of the Walpole School Committee.

The signing of a permission slip was part of a formal chemical health policy adopted by the committee.

The policy was based on rules established by the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association last spring. Uniform penalties for athletes who possess, use or sell alcohol or drugs were set with the notable exception of prescription drugs under a doctor's supervision.

Under rules of the MIAA, a first violation requires a two-week suspension, a second violation carries a 12-week penalty and athletes who are found guilty of a third violation will become ineligible to participate in their sport for one year.

Back in the 1970s a coach would say to his team: "If I catch you smoking cigarettes in the courtyard or find out you're drinking, you're off the team. It doesn't matter how good you are or if it is this one time. Take care of your body because if you're spending time practicing six days a week, one cigarette butt undoes all the hard work you have done."

Anyone who is an athlete should have enough sense to realize cigarettes, drugs and drinking destroys the body and the mind, especially in athletic performance.

What is particularly upsetting about this permission slip proposal is the lack of personal pride in one's body and the lack of faith in one's honesty and trust.

Has society degenerated to this point: That before you can run the quarter-mile, you must bring in a signed permission slip from your parents?

That is comparable to bringing a signed permission slip to "come in from under the rain."

Are we taking too much for granted that a high school student can't realize that athletics and controlled substances do not mix?

But on the other hand, the death of the Celtic's Len Bias didn't make much sense either.

Educating youth to the perils of drugs is imperative and important. The bureaucracy of permission slips is absurd.

NEWS ITEM — Hingham and Cohasset residents were informed of an impending peril to the state's groundwater resources. The two communities are planning a combined Hazardous Waste Collection Day. State group says there are 1000 to 1500 hazardous waste sites in state and only 351 towns. Acres of buried steel drums rust their toxins into ground water, town wells

Reader offended by nuclear comments

Letters

To the Editor:

For months we have been reading R.M. Campbell's "column" on the editorial pages of the Mariner, and, I must say, I am tired of reading his facts and fiction.

Lately he is becoming blatant and offensive, and with little quips ("Although probably not financed or directed by the USSR their destructive and irresponsible behavior, together with the behavior of so many other individuals and groups . . .") he tries to belittle and provoke and convert the public to his opinions and his information.

What Mr. Campbell fails to realize is that we are an intelligent, lucid group of individuals who read good newspapers (The New York Times, The Christian Science Monitor, etc.) and we get excellent sources from the library.

He writes: "I notice that the trash books on the nuclear issue get much play in the public libraries . . ." Really?

Is he now the caretaker of the literature that we read? We choose the books; we read all sides of the issues, we judge, we evaluate, we make up our own minds! . . .We question, and dispute those preachers who think they have all the right answers!

But, for the moment, let's ignore the machines with their scientific theories, their projections, their technical facts. For the scrutiny of HUMAN BEINGS let's just look at three choice specifics—about the nuclear industry: Hiroshima, Nagasaki, a Chernobyl—in our own backyard.

Anyone who believes it can't happen here is a fool, or an ostrich.

One more thing—a bit of wisdom by David Gore: "It would indeed be a tragedy if the history of the human race proved to be nothing more than a story of an ape playing with a box of matches on a petrol dump."

Priscilla D. Daniels
Cohasset

Visiting professor loves Cohasset

To the Editor:

I would like to compliment the people of Cohasset with their great town.

My wife and I vacationed here two summers in a row now. Last year we arranged a series of home exchanges in Milton, Cambridge, Scituate and Cohasset, while I lectured at Northeastern. We also had the opportunity to travel the New England coast, however the more we saw, the more we were impressed by Cohasset.

We fell in love with the exciting combination of your uncrowded beaches, your undulating hills, lovely woods and colonial homes. This combination makes an unforgettable impression on people from a flat country where room is scarce and houses are built out of brick.

We were also very much impressed by the openness, hospitality and courtesy of the Cohasset people.

Our country is known for its tulips, cheese and wooden shoes; but believe me, driving a car in Holland is not anything like it is in the United States, where everyone is bound to control its speed and speeding is not the national sport.

Driving around town in Cohasset made us feel very much at ease, especially when at times it came with friendly handwaving when we were in doubt at an intersection, as if we were invited to join a dance!

This summer we were happy to return to this friendly atmosphere as a result of an exchange of homes with a Cohasset family. We did not only exchange our homes, but also our cars. We had a wonderful time and also enjoyed sharing in the Eastwick excitement!

Our Cohasset counterparts enjoyed their stay in Europe, where our house, 10 miles south of Amsterdam airport, served as their base for exciting trips in Europe.

Next year, we hope that a similar exchange can be arranged so that we can do it all over again!

For lack of better words, to sum it all up, please allow me to paraphrase President Kennedy's line,...

"I am a Cohassetter!"

Special police officers rejected by selectmen

Selectmen voted to abolish the practice of appointing special police officers.

The board agreed with the recommendation of Police Chief Joseph Kealey, who wrote that "there is far too much liability for the town to appoint special police officers.

The board also voted to deny a request by retired police officer John Rhodes for payment of unused sick leave.

"Labor counsel suggests you deny the request," said Executive Secretary Donald Andrew. "We're not obligated to pay it. There's a difference in the law between sick leave and retirement leave."

Clean restaurants rewarded with new rating

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Some Cohasset restaurants could be displaying a big red "A" in their windows in the near future.

Unlike the scarlet letter sported by Hester Prynne, this red "A" is a reward, not a punishment.

The board of health has created a certificate of excellence for restaurants that score exceptionally well on their health inspections.

"The board of health wants a way to recognize excellence from the standpoint of sanitation," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "We will award the certificate to any restaurant that has no defects in sanitation during our routine inspections."

The 14 restaurants in Cohasset that have tables and seats will be eligible to earn the new certificate, Godzik said.

"We're trying to make the general public aware of establishments that are performing above and beyond the call of duty," he said. "It's an excellence rating—it doesn't mean that an establishment without the award is unsanitary."

Godzik inspects each restaurant in town twice a year. Visits are unannounced, although restaurants know that they will be inspected one time in December, since state law requires that they are inspected in the month their permits expire.

Godzik rates the restaurants using a 52-item state checklist in the areas of food supplies, food protection and storage, personnel, equipment and utensils, sanitary facilities, and physical facilities.

The state highlights 13 critical items, including proper storage of perishables, good hygenic practices of employees, no rodents or insects, toilets and sanitary system in good working order, and proper storage and labelling of toxic materials.

In order for a restaurant to be granted a certificate of excellence, it must not have any violations in the critical areas, and have no more than five violations in the non-critical areas, Godzik said.

"The so-called critical areas are important in regard to food-caused disease," Godzik said. "That's the whole name of the game, preventing illness."

There have not been any major violations in the last few years, according to Godzik. He said the health board has been considering a special award for a few months.

Godzik said the certificate will serve as a reward to those restaurants already doing an outstanding job, and possibly spur other establishments to make a special effort to meet all the sanitary regulations.

The certificate will be valid from inspection to inspection. If a restaurant meets the criteria in its first inspection but fails in the second, the certificate will be removed, Godzik said.

Godzik met with representatives from the town's eateries earlier this month to explain the program to them.

Godzik periodically holds free classes for local restauranteers on different aspects of restaurant sanitation.

"It's something the board of health feels we should do," said Godzik. "Part of the responsibility of the board is health education."

Mosquito control takes the bite out of summer

By Bob Briggs
Mariner Correspondent

After a relatively average year of mosquito problems, look for more problems to pop up as the summer draws to a close.

According to Richard Simmons, the Hanover Board of Health agent, "Due to the dry spring the mosquitos haven't been too bad this summer. However, because of the increase in rain lately, there should be a lot more mosquitos for us to deal with."

Towns on the South Shore have two different methods to deal with the yearly invasion. Six towns, including Hanover, rely on an aerial spraying contractor; C and W Ag Air of Hanson. The contractor sprays the towns it services three times a year, usually just before the major holidays—Memorial Day, the Fourth of July, and Labor Day—when outdoor activity is at its high point.

The Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project works to control the mosquito population in the remaining 24 towns in the South Shore area.

Where the aerial contractor only sprays three times a summer, the project has become a year round operation. There are three main phases in their program.

The first is perhaps the hardest for project workers. They try to eliminate as many breeding sites as possible by unclogging streams and ditches and helping to increase drainage from certain areas. This goes on year round, especially during the fall and early spring.

The next phase is called larvaecide. By spraying areas with a pump can, a truck with a hydraulic pump, and even some helicopter spraying in some marsh areas, project workers try to kill the mosquitos before they reach the adult stage and spread out. At the larvae stage, there may be thousands of insects in a very small area. This is the most effective and controllable stage.

The third phase is the spraying for adults. Dan Daly, the Project's Coordinator of Community Information, said "This phase is the most visible but least effective as it takes direct contact to kill. Many people think it is all we do."

There are 2000 different species of mosquitos in the world, 45 in Plymouth County alone. Of these, only some bite humans. To find out where these species are, project workers bring samples back to the office in Kingston.

The agency has a fully equipped lab and can determine species type. If the type found in a certain area is not a problem case that area will not be a priority.

The two main problem species in the area are the solicitans, found in the salt water marshes, and the perturban, found in inland cattail swamps. The large number of mosquitos in the wetlands is one reason why towns like Hanover opt for aerial spraying. Simmons said, "We have a lot of wetlands that cannot be reached by trucks."

The insecticide the Project uses to combat the mosquitos is called resmethrine. It is mixed in a 1:10 ratio with soy bean oil. Eight trucks go out and spray this mixture daily between 4 a.m. and 8 a.m. They only spray .001 pounds per acre, but the effects are devastating for any mosquitos touched by the spray. They will die within five minutes.

Resmethrine is safe, said officials, and using the trucks gives the sprayers a lot of control. Within four hours of spraying, the insecticide is already breaking down. It leaves no residue and has been tested extensively with no effects on people or animals. In fact, it has been found to kill the popular greenhead fly. "But," Daly stresses, "it has no effect on bees."

If a resident does not want their home sprayed, all one has to do is find out if the Project services your town and call them to request that you not be sprayed.

The spray has a 300 foot drift area. The trucks will go down driveways of houses that are further than 300 feet from the road.

C.W. Ag Air uses the insecticide malathion. It kills all stages of growth on contact. They use only three ounces per acre with no base. According to Simmons, "This is what the state calls 'ultra low volume spraying.' " The malathion totally dissipates within 24 hours.

In previous years, Hanover has also had a larvaecide program in the past. However, because of a lack of money and no budget increase, these programs were forced to stop.

The areas to be sprayed by the project are determined in a few ways. The first determinent is the number of calls received. This number is a barometer for the mosquito season. "Last week we got 142 calls and this week we only had 50," said Daly. He anticipates a large number of calls in the upcoming week.

Besides the calls, the Project uses two reporting methods to determine trouble spots. In the first the worker goes to a site and stands still for a few minutes. He then counts how many mosquitos land on him. The worker also takes samples back to the lab.

Another device used is the light trap. These traps are spread throughout the towns the project serves. They attract and trap the insects. These are collected and the species are determined before a truck is sent. Daly thinks determining the species type is very important. "There may be hundreds in a trap, but if they aren't problem species, that area won't be a priority."

Aerial contractors use patterns to cover almost all of the total area in their towns. If budget constraints do not allow for complete coverage, they concentrate on the residential areas first and then spray woodlands.

Many things can have an effect on a mosquito's life, especially the weather. Once eggs are laid, they need moisture to hatch. This moisture may come from moist soil, standing water, or a stream or brook. If eggs are laid in an area that dries up, the eggs will not hatch until the area is wet again, no matter how long it takes.

Under optimal warm water conditions, it takes a maximum of eight days for an egg to become an adult. The larvae stage can last four or five days before the larva becomes a pupa. The pupa stage last two or three days before the mosquito becomes an adult. The average life span for an adult is fourteen days.

Within these two weeks a mosquito can bite many people or animals. However, only the female does the biting. The initial bite and ingesting of blood is called the "blood meal." This must occur before the mosquito can lay her eggs.

It is after this "blood meal" that the transfer of diseases may take place. This is rare. In fact, this year state health officials do not anticipate any cases of encephalitis or any other insect transfered diseases.

There are some homeowner suggestions. Check around your house and make sure there isn't standing water, no matter how little. According to Daly, "anything around the house, even soda cans, old tires or bird baths can serve as breeding grounds."

The combatting of mosquitos and other insects should be left to these professional groups. The increase in the number of unlicensed applicators has led the Department of Food and Agriculture (DFA) to issue a warning to consumers. If you think you have to call in a commercial applicator to your house, make sure the applicator has a license from the DFA.

The license should bear the expiration date 12/31/86 in order to be valid. If you have any questions, please call the DFA at 727-2863 or 727-7712.

Letters

State law doesn't protect homeowner

To the Editor:

Several weeks ago I wrote to you concerning my situation with regard to a failing septic system.

I would like to follow up that letter with information regarding one of the statements I made. I related that my attorneys were investigating the possibility of litigation against the builder of my house and the previous owner.

Well, "justice is a fickle entity". The builder is protected by Massachusetts Statutes of Limitations. It does not matter how many building codes, septic codes, or water codes he broke.

The law is explicit and states that action must be started within a specified number of years from time of the alleged violation.

In my case it would have been highly improbable that any violation would have been discovered unless the system was excavated.

How many people have excavated their septic systems lately to see if it's correctly installed?

The matter of the previous homeowner is an example of going from "the ridiculous to the sublime". The law (Massachusetts) states that if a homeowner "never tells anyone about a defective septic system and no one ever asks him if it's defective" then he can't be held liable for repair costs incurred by a subsequent purchaser of the house. How's that for a fair law!

The "bottom line" is that I'm out $20,000 for the new system and the people who caused it and covered it up walk away uneffected because of protection under state law.

Summer reading program concludes at Pratt Library

"Drop Everything and Read," the Summer Reading Program at the Paul Pratt Library, concluded August 22 with a balloon fest to honor the Cohasset youngsters who participated in the program.

As part of the party fun, Nancy Connolly, a Cohasset artist, guided the children in making balloon puppets.

Games included a balloon relay, and refreshments were provided by several mothers of the program's participants.

The party ended with a balloon release in which readers listed the title of their favorite book and asked the recipient to mail back the title of their favorite book.

Nancy Connolly and Cissie Cullivan, board members of the Friends of the Library which sponsored the program, coordinated the party.

Watson named choral arts music director

After a search that included reading nine candidates interviews, and a "conduct-off," the board of the choral art society has chosen as its new music director Anne Watson, who has music degrees from the University of the Pacific in California and the New England Conservatory of Music. Watson, a native of Nebraska, now lives in Cambridge.

In June of this year she was one of the conductors selected for the master class in choral and orchestral conducting at the Oregon Bach Festival, and in July was one of the guest conductors at the Aspen Music Festival, taught at several Massachusetts private preparatory schools and has been music director and conductor of numerous churches and music organizations in Nebraska, California and Massachusetts. Most recently she has taught at the Brookline Music School and conducted the Brookline Chorus and Chamber Chorus.

Anne Watson follows William C. Sano, the Choral Art Society's director for the past seven years, who resigned because of increased professional commitments. Under her direct.on the Society is looking forward to a continuation of the fine programming and concerts that have been a tradition since the Society's founding by William T. Adams in 1958.

The Society's Christmas concert is set for Dec. 6 at St. Luke's Episcopal Church, Scituate, and will include music for choir and brass instruments.

Rehearsals begin Monday, Sept. 8, at 8 p.m., at the Scituate Public Library, Branch Street, Scituate, and all singers are welcome. For more information those interested may call 834-8962 or 545-3273.

Scott Ketcham displays works in Hingham

The paintings of Cohasset artist, Scott Ketcham, will be the opening exhibit at the Staircase Gallery in the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham from Sept. 7 thru October. The Gallery is at Cedar Hill, off 19 Fort Hill Street and is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Saturday from 9 a.m. to noon. There is no admission charge.

Scott Ketcham was raised in Cohasset and attended school there. While he was in Cohasset High School he recieved two gold key awards in the National High School Art Competition. He studied for ten years with William Schultz and received a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts from Williams College. A multi-talented artist, Ketcham not only draws and paints in oil, but also does printmaking and set design. He has designed sets for many South Shore community theater productions.

He has won awards for his painting in the Scituate Arts Festival and from the Duxbury Art Association. He was selected as one of two artists for the 1985 President's Choice Exhibit at the South Shore Art Center and he has received grants from the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council. Scott is active in a number of singing and dramatic organizations.

He is a former president of the Cohasset Dramatic Club and he has directed several musical productions for the Cohasset High School.

The South Shore Conservatory is a non profit community school of the arts and is funded in part by the Mass. Council of the Arts and Humanities.

Republican reception

Former Gov. John Volpe will host a reception for all Republican candidates on Sept. 8 from 6 to 9 p.m. at the new Navona restaurant, Route 53 in Hingham. The cost will be $25 per person.

Mrs. Derby remembered

A group of children and adults paid a visit to the patients at the Ripley Road Nursing Home Aug. 21.

They presented a plaque in memory of their friend, Myrtle, L. Derby, who had been a resident of Cohasset for over 50 years and had lived at the home for much of the last three years of her life. (She died May 17)

"We feel it fitting that a lady who gave so much love and comfort to others less fortunate than herself should be honored by those who knew her and loved her," said Polly Doggett, spokesperson for the group. "She was always popular with young and old alike."

A short program was given by the visitors: Violin duets by Jamie Mormann, 10, from Marshfield, and Danny Arkell, 12, from Hingham. Songs by the younger children and Josie and Seth Mielsen, 11 and 7, of Hingham told what they remembered best about Miss Derby.

Thousands of people are learning to prepare income tax returns.

H & R Block, the world's largest income tax preparation service, is offering a basic income tax course starting the week of September 8th with morning and evening classes available. Classes will be held in H & R Block offices throughout the Boston and South Shore areas.

During the 14 week course, students will study all phases of income tax preparation and receive actual experience in preparing individual returns. Experienced Block personnel will teach current laws, theory, and application as practiced in Block offices nationwide. There is a classroom lecture on each subject and practice problems at every level. Courses are programmed to teach students increasingly complex tax problems as study progresses. Students will find the course both interesting and challenging.

Anyone may enroll. There are no restrictions or qualifications. Courses are ideally suited for housewives, retired persons, teachers, or anyone wanting to increase their tax knowledge.

Qualified course graduates may be offered job interviews for positions with Block. Many accept employment with Block because of the flexible hours available. However, Block is under no obligation to offer employment, nor are graduates under any obligation to accept employment with H & R Block. Those students that are employed by Block however may be eligible for a rebate of the tuition paid to attend the course.

Registration forms and a brochure for the income tax course may be obtained by contacting the H & R Block district office at 19 Commercial Street, E. Braintree, MA 02184, telephone (617) 848-4240.

By Katherine McGrath
Special to the Mariner

On a perfect cool, sunny afternoon, Thursday, Aug. 21, the club members enjoyed a delicious picnic, and social gathering.

Eighty members made a colorful picture, seated in their lawn chairs, on the green lawn.

Board members will meet Tuesday, Sept. 2, at the Unitarian Parish House, at 11a.m. to make plans for the coming social season. Meeting day is every third Thursday of the month.

Unless there is a change, there will be a bingo party with special prizes Thursday, Sept. 18. Lunch is served at noon; all meetings at the Unitarian Parish House.

The big event is the October Fair, Thursday, Oct. 16 with a 99¢ lunch at noon.

There will be many prizes on chance, T.V. set, lobster, and many valuable items, home-made specialties for sale. Come early before they are all sold. All friends invited.

Baseball fans will leave from Cohasset Town Hall at 11:30a.m. on Saturday, Sept. 6, to cheer the Red Sox to victory over the Minnesota Twins.

A few reservations may still be available. Call Ted Huntwork, 383-0984.

P&B Tours present a day at Salem Cross Inn, deluxe motor-coach, Thursday, Oct. 2.

Included will be a delightful luncheon, and an old fashioned hayride.

On the return trip, a stop at Brookfield Orchards for a chance to purchase apples, or other fall produce.

The cost of this day trip is $31. Leave from Cohasset Town Hall at 9:30a.m. Call Connie, 545-3349.

A day at Christine's Restaurant in West Dennis, is Thursday, Sept. 11, via deluxe motor-coach by P&B Tours, for Sixty Plus Club members.

The menu for lunch is baked haddock or roast turkey.Entertainment provided by Christine's world famous nostalgia revue.

Later, stop at Christmas Tree Shop for bargain hunting. Tour will depart from town hall at 9a.m. Call Connie 545-3349. All for $25.

A three-day trip by P&B Tours is scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 22, 23 & 24 for Sixty Plus Club members. Scheduled is a deluxe motor-coach trip, with services of an escort.

The trip will travel to New York State with a stop for a tour of West Point, continuing into the Catskill Mountains, to Nevell County Club.

Many of the club's facilities are available.

In the evening, there will be exciting nightclub performances, a different one for each of the two evenings.

Leaving from town hall at 7:30a.m., price per person is $219, twin $189. Call Connie 545-3349 for reservations and payment.

Phase I of complex renovations completed

Phase one of the renovation plan for the Cohasset elderly complex has been completed. The Cohasset Housing Authority, who run the complex, discussed the plan and other issues at their meeting Tuesday night.

John Muncey, chairman of the Authority, described the plan to renovate the complex as having three phases. "Phase one included new balcony rails, some reshingling, and replacing some broken down crosswalks with new stairs."

The second phase, which has already been approved, will include more reshingling, other roofwork, and the installation of a generator. "The generator will be used to bring power to the main meeting room in case of a power outage," said Muncey.

This phase may also include changes in the handicapped tennant's bathrooms.

The third phase is in the planning stages right now, but it could include a provision to widen the complexes' main road to allow for unhindered passage. "Visiting nurses and other people have to park in the road," said Muncey. This could create problems if an ambulance or fire truck had to get through in a hurry.

In other news, the Authority is looking into getting some disaster money to take out some trees that were damaged by Hurricane Charley.

They also accepted the state's Emergency Case Plan. The plan allows for the prioritization of homeless people for available housing. "This really only applies to towns which have family housing," said Muncey. Due to state regulations, the Authority had to pass the plan even though it is not applicable.

The next Cohasset Housing Authority meeting will be Tuesday, September 23.

FROM THE DIRECTOR

Walking is keeping them fit! "Walking is known to be the best medicine." So Hippocrates said more than 2,000 years ago.

His words have been echoed by many physicians including podiatrists, orthopedists, cardiologist, and members of virtually every branch of modern clinical medicine.

Today, there is a growing group of people with "get-up and go" and their all over 50 years old in Cohasset.

It's called the Cohasset Senior Walking Club better known as the Cohasset Shrudders. The club meets at 9a.m. on Tuesdays through Fridays at the Cohasset Senior Center, 3 No. Main St.

The club was formed last April in response to many telephone calls from interested people who had heard about the State (EOEA) Department of Elder Affairs organization of local walking clubs. Most of our members range in the age of 60 to 75. The oldest member is 83.

Daily walks are supervised under the direction of Ann Leonard, Jane Tilden, who are both trained leaders. Our two new leaders for the Thursday walk is Lillian Lincoln and Shirley Laidlaw. All of the leaders are enthusiastic and enjoy the companionship of the program.

Members meet at the Senior Center at 9a.m., they start with warm-up exercise and then take a walk at their own pace around town for about one hour, or about 2 miles a day.

Fridays, the group has a mystery trip to a different park around the South Shore area. "We have lots of fun and meet new people from other towns," says Kathy Bryanton, Senior Center Director.

Members are now gearing up to enter the Governor's Cup Event on the Boston Common. Buses will be used to travel from Cohasset to the Boston Common for this wonderful event. Anyone forty (40) or over is welcome to join us that day. Applications are now available at the Senior Center or call 383-9112.

With Diet Workshop you can succeed at dieting even if you have never before. You can become a successful loser! Sign up for the fall class which will begin Sept. 17, at 10:30 to 11:30a.m.

L.O.S.S.

There is now a resource on the South Shore for widows, widowers and others coping with grief which meets during the day. L.O.S.S., a support group for people all ages grieving the loss of someone special, meets at the Scituate Senior Center, 27 Brook St., on the second and fourth Thursday of each month at 12:30p.m. The meetings are led by Jane Parker, M.S.W. Ms. Parker is the Bereavement Coordinator of Hospice of the South Shore and had a great deal of experience helping people cope with grief.

"Widows support groups have been offered in the area for some time," said Bonnie Haley, Director of the Senior Center, "but we were unable to find one that met during the day. Many of our older residents find it difficult to go out in the evenings and we wanted to be able to offer them support at a more convenient time. We also felt it was important to include people who are grieving the loss of a child, a parent or a close friend."

Professional resource people from the community will be invited to speak at some meetings on topics of specific interest to speak at the meetings. For more information, call 545-6700, Ext. 280.

ELDER ADVOCATES SPOTLIGHT

In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts there are currently over 1,000 graduates of the two-day Massachusetts Elder Advocates Training Program. Recently, some of these graduates were asked the question: "How have you used the information learned at Elder Advocates session? While responses varied, every graduate reported that he or she had benefitted from participating in the training session.

Elder Advocates live all over Massachusetts and are active in many outside activities. An Elder Advocate may also be a Senior Aide, Elder Service Corps member, Ombudsman, or a member of AARP, MAOA, Mass Senior Action Council, Older Women's League, Gray Panthers, or a Local Council on Aging.

In September the beginning of a new Fall 1986 Mass. Elder Advocates Training Program will begin. Each fall this program attracts many new and interested senior Advocates while they provide ongoing advocacy training for previous graduates.

Throughout the Commonwealth, Elder Advocates make significant contributions, bringing knowledge and commitment to their own communities. Working together, we can influence issues facing elders and the community. Registration forms are available at the Senior Center. 383-9112.

Pond planned for Wompatuck

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

The state hopes to build a swimming pond in Wompatuck State Park.

A site will be chosen and preliminary engineering work will be completed for a public meeting on the project by November, said Planner Jack Lash of the state Department of Environmental Management.

"Increasing the recreational opportunities in Wompatuck is a primary concern of DEM," Lash told the Wompatuck State Park Advisory Council last week.

"One thing we've talked about for a long time is swimming," he said. "Swimming is something that's missing here that could offer enjoyment to a lot of people and attract them to come back to the park a second time."

Surveys of campers done in 1980 and 1985 revealed that people wanted swimming facilities in the park, and that campers would be willing to pay a higher fee if swimming was offered.

The preliminary proposal calls for a five acre pond to be built in the campground area. A bath house with access for the handicapped will also be built.

Lash said that the state built similar ponds in 1981, costing $819,000 and $1.1 million. He said the construction costs now would be higher.

After plans are completed and the public meeting is held, an application for funds must be made to state agencies.

Advisory council member Allerton Bonney of Scituate said that a similar proposal was made before, but money was not appropriated for the plan.

"All this was brought up about 10 years ago," said Bonney, "but the state said they didn't have the money and the idea went down the tubes.

"I'm all for it," he added. "The bigger the better as far as I'm concerned. We have a lot of property in the park that could be put to better use."

One obstacle to the plan is the question of vehicle access to the park. Right now only one road, Free Street in Hingham, leads into the park.

Neighbors in Hingham have expressed concern in the past that if more facilities are created in Wompatuck, another access road will be needed.

A possible access road leading in from Norwell is opposed by residents of that town, according to council representative Wesley Osborne of Norwell.

Lash said that DEM is considering a pond big enough for 200 swimmers. The pond would have a clay bottom with a liner. About 100 of the park's 400 campsites would be eliminated for the project.

A $3 fee would be charged for day use of the pond, which would be open to day users as well as campers.

Lash said that the park operates at a yearly deficit of around $100,000, and that the DEM is looking for ways to offset the deficit at the park.

The DEM is also considering charging a fee for water from Mount Blue Spring, and is looking at building a picnic pavillion available for rental to raise money.

Lash said that the DEM feels that swimming should be offered at Wompatuck.

"The feeling is very strong among the higher echelon at DEM that we proceed with this now," said Lash. "There's a demand for swimming. Those of us at DEM don't just say 'let's throw in a swimming facility at Wompatuck.' People have said they want this in the park."

Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Flynn (right) is teaming up with area law enforcement officials to spread the word about drug abuse.

Hotline helps fight drug abuse

Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Y. Flynn has appealed to the residents of Plymouth County to call the Sheriff's Department's drug hotline with any information they have about marijuana farming and other illegal drug activity. The toll-free number to call is: 1-800-622-4300.

"We depend on the eyes and ears of the public to help law enforcement agencies wipe out this menace to our society. Each tip telephoned in is passed to local or state police agencies for investigation. This is a way individual citizens can help keep their community free of marijuana and other drugs," Flynn said.

"The public is the greatest source of information about illegal drug activities. If you know of someone cultivating marijuana, that is someone who is breaking the law, supplying drugs to our kids, and contributing to the breakdown of families in Plymouth County.

"Any information is useful, no matter how small or insignificant it may seem. The tips received over the hotline are collected, analyzed and passed on to the proper law enforcement agencies. Callers do not have to identify themselves and may remain anonymous if they wish. The calls are not recorded. We would like to have the informant's name and telephone number so follow-up information can be obtained, but we assure strict confidentiality if it is requested," the Sheriff said.

The Sheriff pointed out that President Reagan has asked Congress to appropriate additional funds to combat illicit drugs and Governor Dukakis' Alliance Against Drugs is now in high gear. "Plymouth County residents are part of the combined anti-drug effort, since no law enforcement or public service agency is capable of eradicating marijuana or other illegal drugs by itself," the Sheriff said.

"The drug eradication hotline number was very successful last year," the Sheriff said, "and we hope to expand the effort this year." The Drug Enforcement Administration has again awarded a grant to the Sheriff's Department to continue to coordinate the collection and dissemination of drug information and the marijuana eradication program in Plymouth County.

"Call us at 1-800-622-4300. We depend on the public for help. No marijuana sighting is unimportant, we are just as interested in information about one or two plants as we are about large plots. My goal is to convince our kids to say no to drugs. An important part of that is to put out of business those who would profit by supplying illegal drugs," said Flynn.

Nantasket Beach Bicycle Race slated for Sept. 1

The eighth Annual Nantasket Beach Bicycle Race, to benefit the Saint Vincent de Paul Society, with assistance from Cohasset Cyclesports, will be held Monday morning, Labor Day, September 1 at 8 a.m.

This race, a 25km (15.5 miles) event tours the towns of Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset. The route is challenging, and filled with New England's coastal beauty. The competitors will ride on excellent pavement, over moderate hills along the shore. In previous years many family teams have participated successfully. Men's winning times are in 35:30 range for the 15.5 mile course. Winning women's times are in the vicinity of 37:30.

This year's race will be the first directed by John Wilkie, the new owner of Cohasset Cyclesports. T-shirts, donated by Cohasset Cyclesports will be awarded to all entrants who pre-register.

Following the race will be the award ceremony. Trophies will be awarded to the first Man, Women, and Veteran (40 and over) finishers. Race winners will again be honored by inscription of their names on the St. Vincent trophy. Gift certificates will also be presented to lucky race entrants who are chosen from a random drawing and free refreshments will be provided after the race for all participants.

The race will begin at 8 a.m. sharp, rain or shine at the M.D.C. parking lot on George Washington Boulevard behind the former location of the Giant Roller Coaster, Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, MA. Check-in and post-registration will be from 6:30 to 7:30 a.m., sharp. Riders are urged to pre-register before Aug. 20, by mail to the address indicated on the race application form. If registration forms are not available at your local merchant, to receive them by mail, please call (617) 383-0707 and leave your name, full address with zip, phone number and how many forms needed.

Refunds will not be allowed due to unsafe equipment. Bicycles must pass the mandatory safety inspection and riders are urged to have their bicycle professionally checked for safe operation before race day. Brakes, tires, running gear, and loose parts will be closely scrutinized. Bicycles that do not pass safety inspection will not be allowed to race, and no exceptions will be made. Protective headgear designed for bicycle racing is also mandatory.

Entry forms for this event may be obtained at your local bike shop or merchant. The entry fee is $10, and the field will be limited to the first 750 entrants. All proceeds benefit the St. Vincent de Paul Society, a non-profit charitable organization which gives help to those in need, especially during the holiday seasons.

Coalition stages development seminar

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Planners, engineers, developers, environmentalists and state officials will be on the agenda for the South Shore Coalition's growth-management seminar Sept. 13 in Norwell.

The session — entitled Managing Growth and Change: a perspective on the South Shore — is sponsored by the coalition and Metropolitan Area Planning Council for all local officials involved in development issues.

State Sen. William B. Golden (D-Weymouth) envisioned the seminar would give local officials an appreciation of how their decisions affect other communities.

Talks are scheduled on growth from the state's perspective and its regional effects, zoning and planning issues, affordable housing, environmental and water-quality protection, transportation and how local boards can become more effective.

They day-long conference will include a bus tour of coastal wetlands, probably in Scituate or Marshfield.

Speakers will include a number of experts on a variety of issues, including Amy Anthony, Secretary, Executive Office of Communities and Development.

Local officials are encouraged to attend the conference, as well as anyone else interested in municipal issues and regional growth. Registration for the conference is $8, which includes lunch. Please contact the South Shore Coalition at 659-4909 for further information.

Representatives to the coalition Thursday voted to establish local and regional water-quality committees as part of a groundwater study in the region under a $25,000 state grant.

Coalition Project Manager Jean Christensen of Marshfield said committees of five members should be formed in seven of ten coalition towns. Weymouth, Hingham and Hull have already conducted groundwater studies, she said.

Each local committee would include a selectman and a member from the conservation commission, board of public works or water commission and the health board.

The committees would then designate a representative to a coalition groundwater-study subcommittee that will be moderated by Martin Pillsbury, an MAPC environmental planner.

Groundwater is known to flow from north to south in the region, so how one town protects water supplies will eventually affect water quality in neighboring towns, Christensen said.

We at the Massachusetts State Lottery are very proud of this list.

We're proud because we started the Lottery with the intention of bringing more money into Massachusetts' cities and towns without having to resort to huge tax increases. And we accomplished just that. In fact, in fiscal year 1986, we put over $375 million† back into our neighborhoods. That represents $1 out of every $5 in local aid received by your community.

These revenues continue to increase year after year. From 1985 to 1986, revenues in nearly all of the 351 communities in Massachusetts showed a significant gain.

Clearly, The Massachusetts State Lottery has been very successful at running some very lucrative as well as wonderfully entertaining games.

So, remember, when you play Megabucks, The Numbers Game, or The Instant Games, you're not only taking a chance at winning some great cash prizes. You're also helping out good 'ole MA.

Robert Q. Crane

STATE TREASURER AND CHAIRMAN OF THE LOTTERY COMMISSION

THE LOTTERY

†Proceeds are distributed in two ways: 1. Revenue for the Weekly Game, Instant Games and Daily Numbers Game is distributed twice yearly directly under G.L. c10 sec. 35 (c). 2. Revenue from Megabucks (Arts Lottery) is distributed to the State Arts Lottery Fund and the Local Aid Fund under G.L. c10 sec 35 R (b). The figures for cities and towns are derived from the direct distribution and the Arts Lottery contribution to the Local Aid Fund. Totals are determined by local aid figures for each city and town as calculated by the Department of Revenue divided by the percent contribution provided by the Arts Lottery revenues.

A fleeting farewell to summer with favorites

We've heard a multitude of campaign promises lately, but the candidate who would get my vote would abolish Labor Day. As summer cottages close their shutters and school doors swing wide, our season comes to an abrupt halt and it's no cause for celebration.

We need only deserted beaches, seas bereft of sailboats and fading blossoms in the garden to remind us that summer is drawing to a close.

But, seeing the holiday weekend is once again upon us, let's soothe our spirits with a feast of Reanne Rosenhahn's

FRIED CORN

4 slices bacon
2 T. bacon drippings
1 1/4 c. water
1 tsp. salt
1 T. each cold water, sugar, cornstarch
4 large ears corn, cut off the cob.

Fry bacon and drain, saving 2 T. drippings in pan. Stir in corn, water, salt and sugar. Bring to boil, cover, simmer for 20 to 25 minutes. Stir occasionally. Mix Cornstarch and water until smooth. Add to mixture, boil 1 minute. Add bacon and serve.

Candidates must yearn for homecooked foods as they tour the chicken, peas and mashed potato circuit. Having to smile while choking down another lukewarm meal is a good test of their endurance. Who would trade their hectic schedule for some homecooked food such as another of Reanne's recipes?

HOBO BREAD

1 c. raisins
2 tsp. baking soda
1 c. boiling water
3 T. oil
2 c. flour
1/2 tsp. salt

Combine raisins, soda and water. Cover and stand overnight. Next day: stir together remaining ingredients. Add to raisin mixture. Bake in greased loaf pan at 350 degrees for one hour.

Listening to the pros and cons of election issues, we learn that there's good and bad to everything. One of the good things about the onset of September is that it offers the stay-at-home Mom a little more free time to do what the kids call their "own thing."If you were having a morning coffee for your favorite candidate, you might serve Carol Ebert's

WHOLE WHEAT ZUCCHINI CAKE

2 c. grated zucchini, unpeeled for additional nutrition, (press lightly to remove excess moisture)
3 eggs, beaten light in large bowl, add
3 T. vanilla
2 c. sugar
1 c. oil, or
2 c. honey and 2/3 c. oil

Blend together well, then sift together:

2 to 2 1/2 c. whole wheat flour
1/2 c. cornstarch
4 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda
2 tsp. cinnamon
3/4 tsp. nutmeg
1/2 tsp. each allspice and salt

Blend dry ingredients into liquids, then blend zucchini in well. Stir in 1/2 c. nutmeats, broken. Grease Bundt pan, plus one small loaf pan, OR a 14 1/2 x 10 1/2 x 2" pan. Bake about 40 minutes. Freezes well and is good fresh, or aged a day or two. Glaze as desired.

While we are busy sizing up the candidates as elections draw near, it's interesting to read that we, too, get the once-over when we enter a restaurant and are greeted by the hostess or maitre de.

Whether or not we are ushered to a good table away from the clatter and heat of the kitchen depends a great deal on how we score in their visual examination.

A good table near the front of the dining room where the manager can keep his eye on the waiter is usually assigned to those customers who look like good tippers. Also taken into consideration is the customer's dress, jewelry and even their gestures. Most favored are men accompanied by women and older people.

United Way sets $43.3 million goal

The United Way of Massachusetts Bay has set a record goal of $43.3 million for this year's local fund-raising drive, an 11 percent increase over last year's goal.

United Way volunteers are also shooting for two additional records: sixth consecutive double-digit increase and a fifth consecutive goal-busting drive.

The goal is in response to the dramatic rise in the demand for local health and human services and the continued impact of government cutbacks, according to the United Way's 1986 General Campaign Chairman, Gary L. Countryman, president of Liberty Mutual Insurance Co.

"Despite the economic recovery in our state, many people are still living in poverty," said Countryman. "Also, the changing demands of modern society have put tremendous pressure on the family, resulting in a need for more social services.

From 1983 to 1985 in Massachusetts, requests for emergency food and shelter have increased more than 200 percent; reported cases of child abuse, 51 percent; need for day care, 33 percent; and requests for services for seniors, 27 percent, according to the United Way.

These services are top United Way priorities.

Commuter rail restoration: Update, part III

For years most political leaders calling for the restoration of the Old Colony Railroad were not aware that the Neponset River Bridge had burnt, that the right-of-way through Quincy had been obliterated by the Red Line, or that the main storage facility in Boston for passenger cars in the heyday of railroads had become the site of the Prudential Center. But with the persistent prodding of Sen. William Golden, Rep. Frank Hynes, Sen. Edward Kirby, and Brooks Kelly of the Plymouth County Development Council; with the belated material support of Gov. Dukakis (as opposed to his prior lipservice); and with the excellent research being done by the M.B.T.A.; our leaders have come further in conceiving the scope of the necessary task ahead than I dared hope as recently as a few months ago.

Nevertheless, I cannot be satisfied with this remarkable progress. I no longer fear political abandonment...a region that due to population growth is going to gain a state senator and several state representatives in 1988 is not going to get overlooked in the future as it was in the past. My continuing concern is mediocrity—that a region that demands, deserves, and I believe is willing to pay for excellence, is going to get some service back, but that the service will function according to the "lowest common denominator." I suppose that makes me a snob, but, golly, it seems to me that if this project is worth spending $200 million on it is worth making the best darn commuter railroad in the world.

Unfortunately, I see some signs that mediocrity lies down the track we are on. Partly it is that the M.B.T.A. is due to run the service. Despite vast improvements in the management of the M.B.T.A. in recent years, its "track record" remains a poor one. If you talk to people in Fitchburg, where service was restored in 1980, you will find great dissatisfaction with the M.B.T.A. For instance, Fitchburg and Gardner have a long-standing request for a daily express train that would shorten travel time; the M.B.T.A. has reacted to this request with all the alacrity of a punch-drunk Marvin Hagler sparring partner.

Yet despite the sorry track record the assumption is that the M.B.T.A. will run our commuter trains of the future. The deeper problem is not the M.B.T.A., it is the assumption: we are moving into the future by assumption, which is always a dangerous thing to do. Perhaps the M.B.T.A. is the appropriate entity to run our railroad, but on the other hand perhaps the railroad should be managed by some other entity (for example the Bay Colony Railroad) that reflects the entrepreneurial skill that is so native to the region. The real problem today is that no one is asking that question while there is still time to do so.

Moreover, "moving into the future by assumption" is structured into the way the state is approaching the study of the restoration of service. You see, in preparing the environmental impact study that ultimately will be reviewed by Sec. of Environmental Affairs James Hoyt, the M.B.T.A. staff is required to respond to questions, suggestions, comments, and criticisms. If someone gets up and makes an off-the-wall suggestion (Route 3 centerstrip monorail was one) the staff must take a serious look at it.

But if no one makes a suggestion, even a good one, Stephen Polechronis, the M.B.T.A.'s brilliant assistant project manager, is really not at liberty to make it himself. Thus, although we are working up detailed, costly studies on all manner of dubious ideas, we are not looking at the possibility of a Quincy Center commuter rail stop for the single reason that no one has requested it. I happen to oppose such a stop, but I think we are nuts not to be looking at the pros and cons of such a stop in the planning stage. We are "nuts" because that's a significant question, and if Quincy wakes up from its torpor once it sees successful service, the cost of restudy and redesign then will be enormous. The same is true of many other questions that mustn't wait until someone happens to ask to get dealt with.

The problem here is that the environmental impact study is by nature reactive, technical, and analytical. It is an essential step, one Mr. Polechronis and his associates are doing an excellent job at...but it is not the process by which we should be actually planning the railroad, nor are these the people who should be planning it.

The real planning of the railroad should be done by people who function in a different capacity than technical analysts. The planning role should be assertive, not reactive. Planners should be headstrong and entrepreneurial, not tactful and bureaucratic. They should know railroading and its history here and they should revere our towns and villages, but they needn't be environmental whizzes. Above all they should know about moving people and how transportation looks from the commuter's point of view. In short, this project needs a commanding general whose role it is to propose. Simply reacting to proposals as they emerge from the populace (even from opinionated transportation writers) is not the way to build a railroad. If we had approached the building of the transcontinential railroad this way we would never have gotten across the Rockies!

There are two particular dangers in allowing decisions to be arrived at by the machinations of a technical process. First, it is awfully difficult for a committee (which a technical staff is) to appreciate that the world is not static, it is dynamic. In 1952 we completed a simply magnificent road for traffic congestion as it existed in 1950: Route 128 between Wellesley and the North Shore. But because the road was successful the traffic conditions became such that by 1959 it was obsolete and had to be totally rebuilt. If we restore the railroad we must build it to anticipate its own success in a fast-growing region.

Secondly, there is the question of excellence. We shouldn't be satisfied with a railroad that's as good as the Fitchburg Division any more than we would be satisfied had the Red Sox set out in 1986 with a goal of winning as many games as they did in 1985. I must repeat myself over and again: if this project is worth spending $200 million on it is worth making the best darn commuter railroad in the world.

The best way to illustrate the possible pitfalls of planning a railroad with decisions that are passively "arrived at" is with a few examples.

...Since the top speed on the existing commuter rail network is 50 to 60 m.p.h. we are assuming a top speed of 60 on the new lines. Yet the technology is capable of much more, and on the Plymouth and Middleborough lines 70 m.p.h. would be that much more competitive with the automobile. The more so if service is eventually extended to Cape Cod, Fall River, and New Bedford as it should be.

...Since the state legislature doesn't know the history and has a hard time focusing on complexity, its mandate, by which Mr. Polechronis and his people are bound, is too limited. Because we are only looking at three lines we are overlooking many possibly helpful options that other abandoned lines might offer. For instance...

As I noted last week, Hingham's chief problem is Hull and its commuters. It is possible that the abandoned Pemberton right-of-way could be used as an access road to a station, one that would steer Hull commuters clear of the rest of Hingham. Similarly, Kingston's biggest problem is Duxbury, which although a relatively small community, has a large commuting population that would board the train in Kingston. Another old right-of-way crosses Route 3 just 675 Mittell steps from Kingston Station. This might serve as an access road that would steer Duxbury commuters clear of the rest of Kingston.

Plymouth's biggest problem is that its station is now the site of a Sheraton Hotel. Still another abandoned line crosses Route 3 near Cherry St. I haven't walked that one yet so I can't say positively, but perhaps the Plymouth Division should be extended over that right-of-way to a terminus near Route 3. The historic station near that location was called "Darby."

Rockland's biggest problem is neglect. This, a community that has not generally participted in the economic boom, contains the barely still functioning Hanover Branch. This line should be revived through Hanover to Route 53 near C.S. Eton. That, the approximate location of the line's historic terminus, would be an excellent point at which to pick up Hanover, Pembroke, and Marshfield passengers.

And so it goes. There are lines, abandoned or semi-abandoned through Randolph, Whitman, East Bridgewater, Marshfield, Duxbury, Carver, Hull, and a number of other communities. While it is not feasible or desirable to totally recreate the past, these rights-of-way present options and opportunities that we should be looking at as we plan ahead.

...South Station is undergoing a lovely restoration, but in the creation of an intermodal facility there several tracks have been eliminated. Will there be enough to handle future volume? We must remember that on the north side of the city while management and labor sometimes seem to be trying to kill commuter rail, the ridership grows. There is no question that commuter rail is an idea whose time has come. We must build our railroad to accommodate its own success. We must never forget the spectacle of 1952 bridges over Route 128 being torn down in 1961.

...Will the coaches be reliable and attractive? Will we be able to buy a cup of coffee on the train? Will there be compartments that four to six commuters can purchase together on a monthly basis? Will there be a parlor car for those who don't want to sit next to you and me and who are willing to pay extra for serenity? Will there be cellular phones so the harried executive can get some work done?

...Will the fares be high enough to support excellent maintenance? Gov. Dukakis believes he serves the public interest by keeping public transportation fares low. That may be valid with respect to the rapid transit system, but it is invalid with respect to commuter rail. Business commuters can afford to pay a decent fare, and they should. What they need and want is excellence. There is nothing wrong with running a couple of low-fare trains in the middle of the day, but trains taking well-paid suburbanites to their jobs should have a high enough fare to support good service. $200 million spent restoring service will represent a subsidy of about $1,000 per citizen in the affected communities. I'm not for a huge ongoing operating subsidy beyond that. You and I should pay a fare that approximtely reflects the cost of service.

...I'll conclude with a "biggie." Will the stations that we locate in the most beautiful downtowns this side of heaven be appropriate or will they be something in generic rest room? We need to appreciate that what may be appropriate for Monponsett may be totally wrong for Scituate, and vice versa. We also need to appreciate that nothing will kill the dream of restoring the railroad quicker than stations that are out of place or out of scale in our villages.

In concluding this series (I sometimes have to remind myself that there are other issues) let me observe that the termination of all service to our region on June 30, 1959, which was a great misfortune, now represents a great opportunity. Since, unlike the North Shore, we have no present benchmark of mediocre service, we may do as we please. If we will pay attention and if we will commit ourselves to a labor of love, we have it in our power to build the best darn commuter railroad in the world. The only question is: Will we?

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

The birth of a celebrity

Johnny Carson phoned me last week to ask if I wanted to become a celebrity. I know what you're thinking, and I was surprised myself, but it seems Liberty Weekend and the Kennedy weddings put such a strain on the celebrity population they decided to expand their membership.

I told Johnny quite honestly that I'd never starred in a movie, ran for the senate or dated Warren Beatty, but he said it didn't matter and that if I read People Magazine I'd see how low the standards had already fallen. When I still hesitated, Johnny put Hulk Hogan on the line to assure me that Raquel Welch, Henry Kissinger and Willard Scott had actually asked for me by name. I wouldn't have to do much, Hulk promised: appear on a Bob Hope special, kiss a lot of people I didn't know, have a baby out of wedlock—celebrity stuff.

Sheepishly, I told the Hulkster I was actually a pretty dull character who had trouble making conversation with automatic answering machines. No problem, he said, they could send me on the circuit with Richard Nixon and people would assume he created the dead spots in the conversation.

Well, against my better judgment I agreed to give this celebrity racket a shot. Afterall. . . .

Racket! That reminds me: I'm scheduled to play doubles with Yassir Arafat in a charity tournament and I'm already ten minutes late.

I've got to run. I'll talk to you later.

You know how moody Yassir gets when he's kept waiting.

South Shore Women's Center needs new volunteers

The South Shore Women's Center is beginning its annual recruitment drive for new volunteers. The Women's Center depends heavily on its volunteers to provide much needed services to battered women.

The Women's Center provides a wide range of services to victims of domestic violence. Volunteers staff a 24-hour hotline. Staff provides crisis intervention, emergency shelter, long and short-term counseling and legal advocacy. An anger control group for men is also sponsored by the Center.

In the past, volunteers have been utilized primarily on the hotline. The hotline operates through an answering service, therefore, a volunteer can cover her shift from her own home.

The group is looking for people who are willing to donate their time for two or three shifts per month, during evening and weekend hours.

The Center is also looking for Safe-Home Providers. These are people who are willing to open their homes to women and children who have to flee from a dangerous situation. The length of stay for these women is from one to five days, and the locations of the Safe-Homes are kept strictly confidential. A Safe-Home Provider is on call for one week per month.

The group is especially looking for homes in which Portuguese is spoken, and homes which can accommodate special needs or handicapped people.

Hotline volunteers and Safe-Home Providers will be given a seven week, one night per week training. After they begin their duties, there is ongoing contact with, and supervision by, staff.

There are also new volunteer opportunities available this fall. The center is looking for people who would be available one or more days per week to train as court advocates. This is an excellent opportunity for someone interested in a career in Criminal Justice.

This year the Women's center is committed to extensive community education and outreach programs. In order to facilitate this outreach, the group must train volunteers to do public speaking on the issue of domestic violence.

The South Shore Women's Center welcomes students over 18 years old and elders as volunteers. Call Joan Stiles at 746-2664.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'Our clergyman in Zimbabwe'

Father Raymond Low was born in Australia but has been a South Shore resident for 23 years as rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church in Scituate.

Certainly he qualified as being "nearly native," and with extensive experience in both the United States and the British Commonwealth, he is uniquely qualified to give a penetrating analysis of Zimbabwe, where he spent four weeks this summer. The diocese which includes St. Luke's has a companion relationship with an Anglican diocese in Harare, the capital of Zimbabwe. St. Luke's itself has a companion relationship with St. Mary's parish in Harare. This led Father Low to visit there from approximately July 10 through August 10.

Four Sundays he administered the Eucharist and preached. The singing during worship is done in the native language, Shona, and is accompanied by native drums. Though Father Low spoke English, he had little trouble being understood. Perhaps three-quarters of the congregation is bilingual, since English is taught in the schools.

"The church is 98 percent black," Father Low says. "The churches are jam-packed with people, standing room only. One hundred and fifty children attend Sunday School, and participate during part of adult worship, with perhaps 200 adults. The worship service was full of joy. Sometimes in the West we lose that sense of joy.

"There is a great shortage of clergy there, even though probably three-quarters of the clergy is now native. Three Anglican nuns did the pastoral work."

Harare is a modern city with a population of about 600,000. Father Low pointed out that the Roman Catholics are the largest Christian representation there, that it has a cathedral fit for a European capital and that Prime Minister Robert Mugabe was raised Catholic.

But, as with religious practices everywhere, Zimbabwean Christianity is a mix of old and new. Father Low says, "The tribal system is very much still a factor. Many people still live in tribal huts; men pay dowries for their wives. Tribal burial and other customs still prevail.

"The Church teaches what the faith is, but these customs die hard. They practice them along with their Christian faith. They run parallel."

Also running parallel are the two Zimbabwean cultures, black and white. Known as Southern Rhodesia until less than a decade ago, Zimbabwe fought a civil war which transferred political power from the white majority to the black majority. There are about 100,000 white and almost eight million blacks.

"There was a war, but there has been a peaceful transition," Father Low says. "There has not been any vendetta against whites and blacks who opposed Mr. Mugabe. It wasn't that hard because the two races have always had dealings with each other.

"They didn't have the Boers, the Africaners. It was a different kind of settler that mingled more with the black population. Former head of Rhodesia Ian Smith still lives here, in a kind of retirement. One hundred fifty thousand whites had left for South Africa, England and Australia. Now some are coming back to Zimbabwe because things are so peaceful.

"Mugabe claims to be a Marxist, but he's not interfered with free enterprise. The white farms and businesses are pretty much as they were before he came to power. There is a lot of rhetoric but not much change. For instance, he says he's working ultimately toward a one-party system. That worries me.

"The whites are doing very well economically. They have the second-best economy in Africa, next to South Africa's. Blacks have come in more and more to run the government. There are white cabinet members and whites in other important positions, but blacks control the army, the police.

"What's going to hurt the country is that 50 percent of the population is under 15. At the moment Zimbabwe exports food and the economy is humming, but unemployment is rising. They expect the population to double by the year 2000."

When Father Low was not tending to his clerical duties he traveled. He visited the awe-inspiring Victoria Falls and reports childlike excitement upon seeing elephants and zebra in their native habitat.

Zimbabwe is very protective of their wildlife. People are not hungry, either in the cities or villages. There is good health care and a good, if overcrowded, public school system.

He found the people very warm and friendly. Never did he feel threatened. "They are very friendly to Americans," he says. "But I watched 'Dallas' on their television and wondered what kind of picture the average Zimbabwean has of the U.S. from our television shows. I'm not sure what kind of other information about the states they get. We don't advertize ourselves very well in this regard.

"They feel the U.S. government doesn't understand them, their needs, or their political goals or national aspirations. Just as we are proud of our country, they are proud, too. The main thing on their mind was not the U.S. but South Africa, and many were disappointed that Mr. Reagan had not imposed sanctions.

"There is a feeling that sanctions are needed. It will hurt them, they realize. In fact, I wonder about their industries. And there are a sizable number of Zimbabweans, mostly white, who oppose sanctions, because most of them are in businesses that are dependent on South Africa.

"There are white Zimbabweans who are anything but liberal who feel the South African whites are just digging their own graves by keeping apartheid.

"Whites in Zimbabwe are impressed that there was so little vengence upon those who were deposed. They don't believe that sanctions are going to end apartheid, but they feel it will at least drive home further to the South African government that they are totally isolated.

"I applied for a visa to visit South Africa the same day as three American students. Their visas came through in four days. I was told mine would take six to eight weeks. The only difference in our applications was that mine said 'clergy.' And they did ask what denominaton I represented. I felt that I had been discriminated against. I don't have good feelings about the way I was treated at the South African trade mission."

From our perspective Africa seems an undifferentiated land of unrest. Our view of their societies may be no more accurate than their view of us as seen through "Dallas."

Though surrounded by strife, the Zimbabwe that Father Low saw "has come a long way along the path toward tolerance and a multi-racial society."

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church of Scituate.)

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

The Dragon and the Noble Beast

"According to the Boston Globe, the Dragon announced, "having pet animals is beneficial to your health."

I was frankly skeptical.

"You mean cleaning smelly litter trays, finding dog hair on all the floors and picking cat fur out of my soup is good for me?"

"Go ahead and scoff," the Dragon countered. "The nice man who runs the Delta Society says that lots of people laugh at him. But now respected scientists are beginning to come around to his way of thinking. Patting a dog or a cat, or watching fish in an aquarium can actually lower your blood pressure."

"For years," I told him, "we've had enough dogs and cats to rid the entire free world of hypertension. So how come my blood pressure's still high?"

"Clearly," he said, "you aren't doing enough patting."

"No," I snapped. "I'm too busy picking cat fur out of my soup. And I suppose gagging every time I walk by Breida's guinea pig is healthful exercise for my lungs?"

"Possibly." He thought for a minute. "And anyway, Larry's cat Athena spends most of her time over at the Lane's. She's probably saving them from high blood pressure."

"Right. And poor Jim Lane is so allergic to cats that he walks around with red weepy eyes."

"True," the Dragon admitted, "but at least his pressure is so good he can walk around. And he has the strength to sneeze a lot.

"Furthermore, even if you want to ignore the mounting evidence that the human-animal bond helps people to lead longer, more contented lives, you surely can't overlook the history of centuries of a symbiotic relationship between man and the noble beast. Okay, so we do give them food and shelter. The cats keep our home free from rodents and lend beauty and grace to our lives. The dogs provide unquestioning devotion and protect us from intruders. Don't you feel more secure knowing that Serenity, Flip and Borameer guard our property?"

"Serenity," I reminded him, "is a toy poodle. The only things she protects are stuff she steals from the kids and the other dogs and hides under our bed.

"Flip may, in fact, protect me from intruders. But who protects me from Flip? Last night while I was getting another cup of tea she had the steak off my plate. She figured out a long time ago that once she touches it, it's hers.

"I will have to admit that Borameer comes pretty close to your image of 'The Dog as a Hero.' The time our house was on fire he coughed so much that he woke Larry. But the only person he wants to protect us from is a perfectly nice, law-abiding neighbor. If criminals came to the door he'd probably bring them in and show them around."

"Nevertheless," the Dragon asserted, "the cats do keep rodents away. Tell the truth. Have we ever had mice?"

"No," I admitted, "but aren't skunks rodents? The night air is positively redolent with their presence, and I don't notice the cats doing anything about that. And Roxanne has a new trick. She sleeps on the bathroom windowsill and leaps out at unsuspecting visitors and scares the daylights out of them. Flora and Fauna may never visit here again."

"See," the Dragon roared happily. "I told you it was beneficial having them around. How about opening a can of tuna for that cat?"

"How about opening it yourself?" I asked. "Ever since I came home you've been sitting on that chair without moving."

He had the grace to blush. "As a matter of fact, I turned my ankle. When I was chasing Serenity down the hall because I wanted to give her a bath, I didn't notice Borameer lying on the floor and I tripped over him. But," he added hastily, "he stayed right with me and kept me safe until I could get up."

I smiled. "Maybe I'll open a can of something for Borameer."

Cohasset Mariner

vol. VIII, no. 49 | 383-6731/545-7060 | thursday, september 4, 1986 | 2 sections | 35 cents

Members of the CHS soccer squad battle Weston High in a pre-season scrimmage last week. Good luck to the team and new coach Dan Magher. (photo by John Magadieu)

Could it be another year of CHS champs?

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Optimism abounds at Cohasset High School this fall as coaches and players anticipate what could be a very successful fall sports season.

The football, field hockey, and boys and girls soccer teams should be strong this year, with many key athletes returning.

Two new faces will be on the sidelines, with Clare Brady coaching the field hockey team and Dan Magner taking over the reins for boys soccer.

FOOTBALL

The football team lost seven players to graduation from last year's 7-3 South Shore League small schools division tri-champions, but the Skippers have a good shot at the title again this year.

"Everyone in our league is going to be very competitive," said Coach Phil Pisano, "but if we stay healthy we're going to be a strong football team."

Pisano said that Norwell (away Sept. 20) and East Bridgewater (at home Nov. 8), the teams that shared the championship with Cohasset in '85, should provide tough competition for the Skippers again this year.

The team will again run from the wishbone, and an experienced backfield and a veteran interior line will lead the Skippers.

The line features five returning starters in center Liam Stanford, guards Jeff Soltesz and Pat O'Connor, and tackles Jeff Lydon and Jeff Lloyd.

Quarterback Sean Corkery returns to direct the offense, and Bobby Durkin, Phil Mahoney and Peter Sandblom will line up in the backfield.

A battle is currently being waged for the starting end positions, with Matt Maloney, Adam Whitman and Todd Henry vying for the tight end slot, and Sean Fitzsimmons, Craig Mulcahy, Mike Smith and Jim Maguire going for split end.

The team will run mostly a 5-2 alignment on defense, with Derek Lacks anchoring the squad at nose guard.

Harsh drug-alcohol policy in effect

Athletes at Cohasset High School should stay away from booze and drugs if they value competing on school teams.

Any Cohasset High athlete who drinks or takes drugs will be suspended for the season, according to Athletic Director Clark Chatterton.

"The school committee adopted a policy concerning alcohol and drugs a few years ago that's been in place for a while," said Chatterton. "Any student caught drinking or using drugs is automatically suspended for the season."

Alcohol and drug abuse among teenagers is a growing concern across the country. In a recent Gallup survey of 1,552 adults nationwide for USA Today, drug use was cited most often as the biggest problem in public schools.

The Walpole school committee last week adopted as part of a new chemical health policy an athletic permission slip that states an athlete will not use drugs or alcohol.

The student and his or her parents must sign the permission slip in order for the student to be eligible for school sports.

Last spring, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Assocaition recommended penalties for athletes who possess, use or sell drugs or alcohol. The MIAA penalties included a two-week suspension for a first violation, 12 weeks for the second violation and a full year of ineligibility for a third violation.

Cohasset has had a written drug and alcohol policy for athletes since the school committee adopted the current regulations in 1979.

"Cohasset's been a little ahead of everyone else," said Chatterton. "Some schools have used our rules as a base for their own rules."

Chatterton said coaches go over the drug and alcohol rules, as well as other athletic department regulations written in the student handbook, with their teams before each season.

New assistant principal at CHS

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Cohasset High School's new assistant principal is looking forward to making his mark at Cohasset High School.

John DeLorenzo left a lucrative sales job in Plymouth after 10 months to return to the profession he loves; education.

After forty years in New Jersey, where he served as an assistant principal, among other scholastic roles, DeLorenzo moved to Massachusetts in 1981.

He settled at Silver Lake High School in Kingston, but decided to join a friend in 1985 selling pipes and valves to chemical companies.

"Although it was very rewarding financially," he said, "I was very unhappy. It certainly wasn't the kind of thing I wanted to do; I'd spent too much time with kids and really missed dealing with them."

DeLorenzo said he accepted the job here in Cohasset, because "I am very pleased about what's going on in this school district and the positive things that are happening here."

Along with Cohasset's excellent academic reputation and musclebound sports image, friendliness and spirit were what swayed DeLorenzo.

"I'm just so impressed that everyone made us feel so comfortable and so at home," he said. "A number of students have come in during the one week I've been here to introduce themselves; I've never seen anything like that before!"

He added, "The teachers were here preparing their rooms when they didn't have to be here. School didn't start until today (Tuesday), and they were doing their rooms and coming in and introducing themselves, wishing us well and asking, 'Can I help out?'

"The whole theme and feeling of working together is such a positive thing, it makes you feel good."

DeLorenzo is aware he is following a tough act as assistant principal.

"From what I hear," he said, "the Mister D who was here before me had a great reputation, so they're going to be tough shoes to fill.

"But I'm my own person," he added, "so people are going to have to get to know me for who I am."

DeLorenzo said he looks to be visible and involved.

"I'm a big family man," he said, "and you'll see my wife and daughters at activities. I think it's important for the kids to see you at different activities. And it's not just going to the football games, but going to drama club and seeing the JV teams play and stopping in at meetings.

School system booklet

Shortly after school opens, each household will receive a copy of the updated "Know Your Schools" book, which is a study of the Cohasset school system.

The League has been working for the past year on updating this informative book. There has been a lot of time and energy put into the project and the League hopes you will benefit from their labors. They also hope you will be reminded of their other works that they provide as a public service, and encourage you to show your support by sending in a donation when you receive your copy.

More information about the book will be available soon.

Notice to property owners

John P. Riley, deputy collector to the Treasurer-Collector will be serving warrants within the next two weeks on all unpaid FISCAL 1986 Real Estate Taxes.

Demands were sent from the Treasurer-Collector's office on the 1986 tax bills, May 16. These bills were due May 1, 1986. The next step will be an ad in the local newspaper announcing the 1986 properties to be taken for non-payment.

The Treasurer-Collector's office is located in the town hall at 41 Highland Avenue. Or you may call the office at 383-0611.

Hot-seat salesmen

If maverick chair salesmen return to Cohasset to peddle their furniture along Route 3A, they will find themselves in the hot-seat, according to Building Inspector Donald Robbins.

The seat sellers' set-up on the highway elicited objections from selectmen and action from Robbins.

"We have corrected the problem," he said Wednesday.

Robbins explained, the chair salesmen had a state hawkers license and had been operating since about June 1.

"A state hawkers license does not supercede local regulations. For this kind of activity, a permit must be issued through the Board of Selectmen."

He added, "Even if they got a permit, they would still have to comply with local zoning regulations; this was an illegal use."

Robbins said, if the chair peddlers return to Cohasset, "the next step would be to take legal action."

Absentee ballots available

Absentee ballots for the September 16 state primary election are available at the town clerk's office in town hall.

The deadline for submission of the absentee ballots is noon, September 15.

The town clerk's office is open Monday through Thursday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Thursday evening from 5:30 to 8, and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Thanks to town employees

Selectmen and Executive Secretary Donald Andrew took time this week to thank town employees for their help in coordinating production of "The Witches of Eastwick" during the filming here last month.

"Needless to say, it has been quite a summer for all of us," Andrew wrote. "The filming of "The Witches of Eastwick" was a huge success and a good time for us all. Warner Brothers and "the witches" have now departed the state and are working further on the film in Hollywood. In less than a year, we can expect to see Cohasset, alias Eastwick, in the movies.

"The Board of Selectmen has asked me to convey the thanks of the members to all town department heads and employees for their cooperation and extra efforts during the filming of the movie this summer. Without your cooperation, it could not have been as successful as it was," he continued.

"On August 25, 1986. Warner Brothers presented the town with a check for $25,000 as a gift to all townspeople, to be spent for something to benefit all townspeople, which might be considered a small portion of the fruits of our labors this summer. Additionally, the area has, and will, benefit financially by this project. We can be very happy and proud that this went as well as it did. All town employees, even the ones that did not have direct connection to the filming, made this possible in some way, however small it might have been.

"Once, again, " Andrew concluded, "thank you for your extra efforts in making this all possible."

MBTA to meet at town hall

MBTA officials and consultants in the Old Colony Railroad restoration study are scheduled to meet with officials and residents of Cohasset at the town hall Thursday, Sept. 25 at 7:30p.m.

The next citizen's advisory committee meeting is scheduled for Thursday, Sept. 18

Notice of tree trimming

The Eastern Edison Company is in the process of maintaining the high tension wires throughout the town in conjunction with Asplundh Tree Company.

They will be in town approximately three to four months.

If any residents have any questions regarding their work, or if they feel they are too close to their property, please call 383-0228 for assistance from the Tree & Park Department, Peter G. Laugelle, superintendent.

Permission slips not needed. . .

them," he said, "and the parents too. Parents get copies of the rules."

Chatterton said he thinks a permission slip like the one approved in Walpole is unnecessary.

"The only reason we would have a parent sign a slip would be to be sure that parents were seeing the rules," he said. "We feel the parents here know what's expected from their children, and we make an effort to educate the parents as well as the student."

"Each student is made aware of the policy," said Superintendent Stephen Hart, "and we try to make our parents aware. Each parent receives a copy of the policy, and parents are made aware of any sanctions we have for violations."

High School Principal Mary Ellen Gallagher, while open to a written permission slip if people desire it, agreed that the slip is unnecessary now.

"There is a tradition among athletes," she said, "and among students in drama and band. There is tremendous peer pressure not to let the team, or club or band, down.

"I'm certainly open to a written permission slip if that's what parents and the community want," said Gallagher, "but our existing rules do a good job now."

Chatterton noted that Cohasset's rules are more strict than last spring's MIAA penalities.

"The MIAA issues guidelines, not laws that we must immediately adopt," he said. "In fact, our rules are tougher than the ones they just adopted.

"I don't know of any school that lets a kid get caught three times before he get's a year suspension," said Chatterton.

Vo-Tech septic system delayed

The South Shore Regional School Committee took steps last week to make the new septic system currently under construction at the Hanover campus usable by next spring.

In the meantime, the 25-year-old existing system will be used.

The school committee approved spending $35,000 for a grease trap that is necessary before the new system can be used.

Also, the committee approved an expansion study of the new system in anticipation of the possible future combination of the Hanover and Abington campuses at the Hanover campus.

Work on the new septic system was held up for two weeks in late July and early August because the project's architect and engineer failed to obtain necessary permits from the Hanover Health Board.

The grease trap, required by law, was not included in the original plan.

School committee member Dennis Blackwell of Hanover said Monday that the grease trap must now go out to bid, and said the system will probably be working by spring.

School officials had hoped that the system would be working by the start of the school year this week, but the work stoppage and the lack of a grease trap have delayed the project's completion.

Murray announces candidacy for re-election

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray (R) has announced her candidacy for re-election to a sixth term in the Massachusetts House of Representatives from the third Plymouth distict. (Cohasset, Hingham and Hull).

Rep. Murray serves as a ranking minority member of the Joint Legislative Committees on Counties, Local Affairs, and Taxation.

A lifelong resident of Cohasset, Rep. Murray's background in town government has made her an advocate for the "local" point of view in legislative debates.

Her local government background includes service as both former Chair and Vice-Chair of the Cohasset Housing Authority, and three terms as a member of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen.

Rep. Murray's presence as the State Representative from the third Plymouth District continues a unique historical tradition.

She is the first "father-daughter team" to serve in the legislature.

Murray's late father, Nathaniel "Nate" Hurwitz, served in the House from the same district she now represents. And, like his daughter, Hurwitz was a leader in local government as well, including 27 years as Chairman of the board of Health and several years as member and chairman of the board of Selectmen.

"The first and foremost duty of a State Representative is to serve her district," Rep. Murray said. "every great state issue is — fundamentally — local issue, an issue facing individuals at the local level.

"I have enjoyed representing the interests of the people of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull, and I hope my record will merit their votes for my re-election," she said.

"The people of the third Plymouth District are more to me than simply 'constituents,' " she said. "They are my neighbors and my friends. And my first obligation is to respond to their inquiries, their needs and their problems."

Rep. Murray said she was "particularly pleased" at several major accomplishments including abolition of the Surtax, reduction in the Meals Tax, and the appropriation of a record high amount of State Aid for local governments."

"Our fight, and it was a successful fight, was to make sure that as much of the state surplus as possible was returned to local taxpayers either through direct tax reduction or through increased local aid," Rep. Murray said.

Locally, she cited a number of gains for Hull including increased budget funding for Nantasket Pier, Pemberton Pier, Allerton Harbor dredging, Allerton Bluffs, and the D. Street Housing. New gates were built at Straits Pond. Additional MDC funds were paid for sewage treatment. And monies were returned to the town for negative MBTA service.

Cohasset received new funding for bridge repair and dredging; and monies were refunded for negative MBTA service.

Funds were allocated for Hingham Harbor dredging and for repairs to the local armory. Funds due the electric light company were paid by the MDC.

"These were just a few of the local accomplishments," she said. Additionally, I helped found the Tri-Town Committee, an organization to coordinate the overall governmental interests of our communities of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

She is chair of the University of Massachusetts Harbor Campus Renovations Commission. As chair of this special committee, Rep. Murray is one of only five House Republicans accorded this prestigious position. She is also a member of the Commission of Gerontology, Children in Need of Services, Special Joint Committee on Comparable Worth for Women (established by House Order 6547 of 1983), South Shore Legislator's Transportation Committee and the Drug and Alcohol Abuse Committee. She also served as a member of the Special Commission for the reorganizational of Public Higher Education.

She is the leading legislataive spokesperson against the establishment of casino gambling in Massachusetts, and served as a key member of the Hurricane Gloria Special Commission.

Sen. Golden named to energy board

State Sen. William Golden of Weymouth has been appointed to the Legislature's Joint Committee on Energy.

Golden, who is Senate Chairman of the Committee on Counties and the Special Commission on Liability for the Release of Oil and Hazardous Materials, will be working with committee members on key issues, such as the recent developments at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant in Plymouth.

"The Energy Committee has already held two legislative hearings regarding the Pilgrim nuclear power plant," said Golden. "As a member of the committee, I have requested that another hearing be held in the near future to accomplish a review of the recent Chernobyl study and the applicability to the Pilgrim nuclear power plant.

"I will also request that further hearings be held regarding the Pilgrim nuclear power plant and a review of the Chernobyl results."

Golden also stated that he has received a letter from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission informing him that a show cause petition recently submitted to the NRC has been filed for publication with the Office of The Federal Register in Washington.

Golden, who delivered that petition and who testified before a Congressional Sub-Committee looking into the Pilgrim situation, said the NRC will be reviewing the allegations of numerous deficiencies in license management at Pilgrim, inadequacy of existing emergency response plans, and inherent deficiencies in the facility's containment structure.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

Home Center Realty

REFINANCING YOUR MORTGAGE

If you've purchased a home during the last few years, you may be paying a relatively high interest rate on your mortgage. Depending on your individual circumstances, refinancing your loan at today's lower rates could save you a lot of money.

There are considerable costs involved in most refinance transactions. First, you'll have to pay some points (a point is 1 percent of the amount of the loan). Then you will have to get a new title search, a termite inspection report, and there will be some legal fees involved. In return, however, you may find yourself with a lowered mortgage payment. In deciding whether or not it makes sense in your case, the biggest factor is the length of time you plan to remain in your home. For just a year or two, it may not pay. Your Realtor can help you work out the numbers that apply to your case and refer you to reputable lenders with competitive rates.

The professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY are ready to serve all of your real estate needs. Please give us a call at 749-8833 or visit our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

Optimism greets CHS sports teams for '87

Pisano said that the team's hard work transformed 1984's 4-5 team into a league champion last year.

"The players have been very receptive to hard work," he said. "They've benefitted from their efforts, and hopefully they realize that their work pays dividends.

"But the real goal is to make sure the kids enjoy playing," said Pisano. "That's our primary responsibility as coaches."

Pisano and assistants Jim Sullivan and Bill Fallon will lead their charges against Boston Tech in the opening game at Milliken Field Sept. 13.

FIELD HOCKEY

What can you do for an encore after going undefeated en route to the league championship, making it to the state semifinals, and being featured on WNEV—TV's Superstar 7 sports segment?

"We hope to repeat as league champions," said Coach Clare Brady, "and go a little farther in the state tournament."

The team lost six players from last year, but Brady is confident the team can make the final four, or even the final two, in the state tournament.

"I think we'll do very well," she said. "We've looked pretty strong in practice."

Senior Maureen Farren, last year's leading scorer in the South Shore League, will terrorize opposing goalkeepers again this year.

Junior Cindy Spooner will help out from the wing, and senior Maria Cahill will provide support from the link position.

Seniors Sarah Dickerman and Jill Shockman will anchor the defense at fullback and sweeper, and junior Heather St. Onge has looked good in practice, Brady said.

In the nets will be Mariner correspondent Lisa Shumaker. Because Lisa sometimes lets modesty get in the way of her reporting, don't expect to see her mentioned in her articles this fall. But she's an outstanding goalkeeper.

"She's been an all star since the 9th grade," Brady said of her senior goalie. "She had 14 shutouts in 20 games last year."

The team went 16-1-4 last year under Gino DiGorolamo, but Brady is no newcomer to the program, having served as J.V. coach for the past 7 years.

BOYS SOCCER

The boys soccer team enjoyed a fine 14-3-2 season last year, winning the division championship and a game in the state tourney.

Eight players are gone from that team, but first year Coach Dan Magner thinks the Skippers are ready for another run for the championship.

"Overall we're a very young team," said Magner, "but we've shown a lot of improvement in our scrimmages and we should be a good team."

The team will face stiff competition from state Division 2 champion Rockland in its quest for the South Shore League title, and Scituate should also be tough.

The Reidy brothers, senior stopper John and freshmen twins Joel, a goalkeeper, and Jim, a fullback, will take care of business in the defensive end.

Junior forward Ian Smart will provide scoring punch, and juniors David Shultz and Todd Fitzpatrick will patrol the field from halfback and midfield respectively.

Magner said that junior Jay Marsak has been "a pleasant surprise" during the scrimmages.

Magner, who was assistant coach at Bridgewater State College and a player for Eastern Nazarene College before coming to Cohasset, has been impressed with the Skippers' teamwork.

"I think we pass very well, and that will just get better as the season goes along," he said. "A lot of our guys played together in the summer Coastal League, and they're familiar with each other's style of play."

Magner, who replaces Jon Anderson, now coach at Babson College, said a big difference so far in the high school game from the college game is community support.

"The parents have been very active," he said, "and very supportive. I'm looking forward to the first game (Sept. 9 at Silver Lake).

GIRLS SOCCER

Experience is the key to the girls soccer team improving upon last year's 4-12-2 mark, said Coach Kennan Startzell.

"We didn't really get blown out of any games last year," said Startzell, "and we were inexperienced. It was trial and error for the players as well as me because I had to shuffle a lot of people at different positions."

"Our prognosis isn't just to get to .500 this year," said Startzell. "We really feel we're going to have a competitive team."

Senior four-year starter Susan Riley is switching from fullback to midfield this year. Three-year starter Caitlin Staunton, last year's leading scorer, will provide firepower from the striker position.

Two goalkeepers, senior Leann Ward and sophomore Nancy Riley, will attempt to shut down the opposition. Senoir sweeper Maureen O'Leary will keep pressure off the net.

Startzell said that newcomer Cindy Dormer, Katie Murphy and Katie Lord have looked good in the preseason.

"We open with maybe our toughest game in Duxbury (Sept. 10)," Startzell said. "We just scrimmaged Hingham, a Division 1 power, last week and held our ground. We're looking forward to a good year."

He studied for ten years with William Schultz and received a Bachelor's degree in Fine Arts from Williams College. A multi-talented artist, Ketcham not only draws and paints in oil, but also does printmaking and set design. He has designed sets for many South Shore community theater productions.

He has won awards for his painting in the Scituate Arts Festival and from the Duxbury Art Association. He was selected as one of two artists for the 1985 President's Choice Exhibit at the South Shore Art Center and he has received grants from the Cohasset Arts Lottery Council. ☐ The George H. Mealy Post is planning a gala event, one that everyone is invited to attend! Saturday, Sept. 13 they are hosting the first annual Clambake, from 11a.m. to sunset. It is to be held at Sandy Beach, and the price is $15 per person. Listen to the menu, your mouth will begin to drool immediately . . .New England Clam Chowder, steamers with drawn butter, barbequed chicken, select lobster, native corn, cole slaw, hot rolls and chilled watermelon. That has to be one of the best buys around, and what fun it promises to be! Bring your beach gear and have a ball! For those who might not enjoy that wonderful sunshine, they are providing a tent and chairs, and they are going to have music as well. Again, I'll say it, what fun it should be !! Call Jack Burke at 383-0815 or 383-9657 for your reservations and/or information.

☐ Jim Ash's family wanted to be sure to wish him a happy 20th birthday, which is Sept. 7. Happy birthday from us too, Jim.

☐ The story that was run on the front page of the Mariner a few weeks ago about the gal who put the ice cream cone in her purse sure gained popularity . . .it was in the Boston Herald last week, and made the local news, too. Sure is lucky that she wouldn't let her name be used, she'd be autographed out by now!

☐ Congratulations to Scott Ketchum, who has a display of his paintings on exhibit at the South Shore Conservatory (at the Staircase Gallery). His exhibits will be on display from Sept. 7 through October, and there is no admission charge. Scott is an artist that works in different areas, from oil painting to drawing to printmaking and set design. He has designed sets for many South Shore community theater productions, and has won many awards for his works. Be sure to see the works of this very talented guy, who certainly has done his share to put Cohasset on the map.

☐ Have you seen Tina Watson's new "baby"? She has the cutest new doberman pup, and he can be seen following Tina everywhere!

☐ For all boys aged 11 to 18, it's time to register for the Boy Scouts. Registration will be held on Monday, Sept. 8 at the Osgood School Gym from 7-9p.m., and the fee is $18.

☐ Polly Logan was spotted around town with her arm in a sling, but we bet that won't slow her down for a minute. That's one busy gal!

☐ Welcome to Larry Eishenhower and his family, who moved to Cohasset recently. Bet he'll be able to tell you a few Patriots stories if asked.

☐ Farewell to Laura Pompeo, off to begin her sophomore year at UNH. One person who is glad that Laura will be there is Ingrid Anderson, who has transferred there from the Univ. of Hartford. It's always nice to have a friend to help when you're a newcomer.

☐ Glad to see the Red Lion Inn doing so well under its new management, but sure do miss seeing Erwin Cone with his Red Lion car around town.

☐ Congratulations to the newly elected officers of the Cohasset League of Women Voters, they do a lot of hard work to help keep us all informed.

☐ Tuesday, September 16 is the date to circle for the Cohasset Bloodmobile. It will be held at the First Parish House, from 2:30—7:30p.m. It's actually a day that won't be hard to forget as its Primary Election Day!

☐ Chris Watters is due back from China this week. He went with a Kung Fu group and stayed for two weeks. Once he gets his time straight (he loses a day each way or something like that), maybe we can get him to give us the details of his trip. We'll bet it was a super one.

☐ Frank and Lorraine Almeida were in town last week, they were celebrating their 32nd anniversary at the South Shore Music Circus. They looked wonderful . . .Lorraine hasn't changed at all, nor Frank other than his hair is pure white (due to all of his heavy coaching duties probably). They told us that all of their children (six) have graduated from college, and they even have a doctor in the family now. It seems as though they were just trying to find babysitting jobs . . . .

☐ That's the news from here, hope all had a wonderful first day of school and that your year is a good one. Keep your news coming!

DeLorenzo to continue tradition of CHS

"Visibility and communication are very important to us," he said.

DeLorenzo said his first and most important task as assistant principal will be to get to know the students and staff.

Another priority high on his list is selling the importance of elective programs to students.

"We have a lot of students here at Cohasset who have study halls and are taking their required courses, but aren't going a step beyond."

He explained, "A large percentage of the class is going on to college, something like 92 percent, which is fantastic. But they will also be going out to live in apartments.

"They'll need to know how to do their own cooking and will have to know certain kinds of repair," he added. What they need to get is basics and they ought to consider courses such as home economics and industrial arts."

DeLorenzo also commented that a "sound education" also includes music and art.

He explained he hopes to light a fire under student government. "I think kids can help sell other students on the positive things going on here at the high school."

DeLorenzo said, while he realizes discipline is an important part of his job, his overall goal is to "continue the fine traditions here at Cohasset High School; they have so much to be proud of."

He cited the academic atmosphere. "Students really do challenge themselves here."

He also praised the amount of student involvement in extra-curricular activities and parental support by the PSO.

Looking back on his previous experience as an educator, DeLorenzo explained what he hopes to offer Cohasset students.

"I feel that I'll make some kind of contribution with them and help them to grow into better human beings, to function in society," he said.

"Everybody says being assistant principal is a tough role, but I believe it's the role you make it.

"I always feel good at graduation time," he said. "You see certain kids, who you know you gave that little extra to, and when they shake your hand, you know they appreciate what you've done."

He added, "Part of my job is to make problem students understand that they're responsible for their own behavior, and if they make mistakes, they have to pay for them.

"Just don't make the same mistake twice; that's my philosophy."

Editorial

Changes abound

With the passing of Labor Day, comes the unofficial end of summer. Although the sunny, warm weather will likely arrive next week, our days on the beach are complete as the new school year begins and summer vacations end.

Our children face many changes as they begin school in Cohasset. Many changes will not be seen in the classroom, but they will nevertheless affect the education they receive this year.

We have a new superintendent in 1986. A familiar face, Stephen Hart will now be at the helm of this system. Although controversy followed his appointment, most residents agree there could not have been a better selection than Hart. He is intelligent, capable, thoughtful and a real nice guy. He's been in the 'kitchen' now for years, and he's proven to all that he can take the heat.

Mary Ellen Gallagher is the new principal at the high school. We've met her several times in Hingham, and heard a lot from her peers when she was an assistant principal at that high school. The day she was appointed to the Cohasset post, her boss, Richard MacLeod, said, "we're so happy for her. But everyone here is really going to miss her. It's a happy and sad day at Hingham High."

Once again, despite the controversy that followed the new appointment, we're confident Gallagher will prove to be a welcomed, admired and necessary part of our high school staff. We're sure parents and students alike will respect and enjoy this personable administrator.

It was tough losing Mr. Di, but we're sure he's going to love his new post at Derby Academy. Our loss is certainly going to be their gain. We wish he and his family the best. No doubt the students and parents will miss former superintendent Eugene Crowell and former high school principal Richard Streeter. They are class acts who will be tough to follow. We used to joke with Mr. Crowell about the various hats he had to wear while superintendent. He was the commander of the troops, and as such, was entitled to all the dignity and respect that office carries.

But as often as we saw him within his high school office, we saw him helping to settle a maintenance problem in a school or even driving a school bus! He laughed about his many "hats" and acknowledged with pride that it was part of operating a small school system. There may be a commander but there are fewer soldiers to complete the assignments.

This year also marks the beginning of a school-sponsored afterschool program. This is an exciting program that is working well in many neighboring communities. For parents who work, it is a great way to avoid the 'latch key' syndrome and keep the kids occupied with their school friends. We will be watching this program closely and listening to reports from the school committee on its effectiveness.

And so the new school year begins. For all the new kindergarteners—we wish you a happy year and hope you meet many new friends. For this year's seniors, have a great year—one you'll remember the rest of your lives. (And win us some championships along the way). And for everyone else, we wish you a successful year, one filled with new adventures in learning and living.

And to all Cohasset Moms . . .congratulations! You kept them busy all summer. You brought them to the library, to the beach, and to assorted outings. Now take a breather . . .but first, mop that puddle of Kool Aid and sand from the kitchen floor. And don't forget to clean out the pool, find all the missing beach towels, sneakers and socks, clean out all the bedrooms . . . .

Everyone getting in on video act

By Valerie Kroon
Mariner Correspondent

The video rental business remains alive and well. And for those established stores with a wide range of titles, owners forecast a bright future.

But opening a new video rental store now could be risky, said Mark Adams, owner of The Movie Place in Hingham's Granery Marketplace. To be competitive, a new store would need a minimum of 1500 titles and about $300,000 to back up the venture, Adams estimates.

"Everyone wants to get in on the act," Adams reported. "It's incredible to try and open a new store, with all the stores already out there."

One of the pioneers in the video rental business, Adams opened his store in 1982. He now shelves more than 3000 titles.

"In the summer, we get lots of kids. But then when school starts, parents don't want their kids watching movies if there's homework to do."

Because of this larger selection, Adams says that he sees a greater number of people who rent classic films like "Gone With the Wind" or "All About Eve," rather than the newer current releases.

Appealing to an age group of "from 8 to 80," Adams believes that the most important facet of a good store is the selection of titles.

"Price is not a determining factor," said Adams. "But perhaps personalized service is; to take the time to help someone make a selection, especially in this area."

A life-time membership at The Movie Place costs $29.95 and rentals are $2, with every tenth rental free. Unique to the area is a pre-pay plan for club members costing $14.95 for ten rentals and allowing a movie to be kept out for three days.

At Home Video Village in Hingham's Lincoln Plaza, owner Bev Conway believes that a good video rental store is determined by the "quantity and availability of rental tapes."

Conway opened her business 2½ years ago with about 800 titles. Now stocking more than 2000 video tapes, Conway finds her most popular rentals are the more currently released movies like "Murphy's Romance" and "Back to the Future."

Conway reported that her largest segment of video renters are those over 30, although this is dependent on the time of year.

"In the summer, we get a lot of kids. But then when school starts, parents don't want their kids watching movies if there's homework to do."

As with all video shops, weekends are busiest, or on a rainy day. Conway said that her business will increase 30 to 40 percent when weather is inclement.

A life-time membership at Home Video Village costs $34.95 and includes free cleaning of club members' video equipment once a year. Conway said that this cleaning service could run a person from $50 up. Also offered at the store is a one-year membership for $14.95.

Conway's store is unique in its stocking of the video tapes right on the shelves rather than behind the counter. This is possible because of an alarm system which is also found in libraries, she said.

Her biggest problem is those few people who do not return rental tapes, Conway reported. With tapes costing $60 each, she said it is a problem if "you have to go chasing them."

Like all other video store owners, John Capellupo, owner of Horizon Video in Cushing Plaza, Cohasset, believes business will continue to grow.

"As more and more buy VCR's, I'd say the business should escalate, not decline in the forseeable future," Capellupo reported.

Capellupo's business is unique in that it is owned by his own media company which he founded ten years ago. Horizon Media, Inc. is a multi-media company doing general sound system work, video production, and radio and TV commercials.

Unlike other area video rental stores, Capellupo finds his most popular rentals to be adventure and horror movies.

"All the action movies and the real horror, horror ones," he said.

Capellupo's renters range in age from 2 to 102, and he acknowledges that the industry is "the best babysitter ever."

In describing what he believes to be a good video rental store, Capellupo said, "A helpful staff; people who are knowledgeable about the movies on the shelf and who have a willingness to help people pick out a movie."

A life-time membership is $39.95 at Horizon Video and includes membership to American Video Association with its 2600 stores nation-wide. Capellupo's members are given a list of all the association's Massachusetts stores when they join.

". . . The smaller stores with fewer titles are dropping out of business. The small can't survive with so many opening up."

Capellupo said that there are "not a lot of problems" in running a video rental store, other than the few customers who do not return tapes on time. With the members allowed to reserve movies, a late return can mean disappointment to the next renter.

The newest ventures in video rentals to crop up are those in retail, service, or convenience stores like Hennessey's News in Hingham Square.

Hennessey's began stocking videos last January and now shelves some 1200 titles. Worker Mike McGaughey reported that the most popular rentals are drama and comedy, although children's movies do well, too.

Although the selection may not be as diverse as in a pure video rental shop, membership is free and all rentals are $2. There is also the convenience of longer hours with Hennessey's open from 5:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.

In summing up his forecast for the future of video rental stores, Mark Adams said, "What appears to be happening, is the smaller stores with fewer titles are dropping out of business. The small can't survive with so many opening up."

Committee chairman hopeful as school year starts

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

As the new school year begins, a new administrative team is buckling down to face some serious challenges to the Cohasset school system.

According to Joseph Nedrow, Chairman of the Cohasset School Committee, the greatest challenge the new management team will face is the preservation of Cohasset's traditional academic quality in the face of a decline in the number of students.

"We still haven't bottomed out in the level of assistant principal."

"The toughest thing continues to be the development of the budget with the commitment of the community."

He expressed his excitement about the character of the new management team, which includes: Stephen Hart as school superintendent; Richard Streeter as assistant superintendent; Mary Ellen Gallagher as high school principal and Jack DeLorenzo.

"I'm hopeful that the individual qualities of the team, particularly of these four new people, will compliment each other and add up to the combined ability of six people rather than four," he said.

"We have fewer and fewer households with children in the school system," Nedrow said. "As few as eight to ten years ago, almost every household in Cohasset had somebody with the shool system, so there was a direct link between the schools and the townspeople.

"For the first time," he explained, "the situation is reversed. We have fewer with children in school, than without; that means the challenge is made even more difficult."

Nedrow said he believes it is especially important for the school system to keep its lines of communication wide open.

"We have to communicate to the community that the costs are worth it to the young people in our town."

He explained, "As we get smaller, we still have fixed costs. For instance, even though we're the smallest school system in the whole South Shore League, it costs us the same to equip a football team and pay for the officials as if we were four or five times bigger than we are.

"The same thing is true in terms of our physical plant," he added. "In the last couple of years we've been fortunate in that we have had a member of the advisory committee sit through all of our budget deliberations.

"We've invited them to participate," he said, "and that's been very helpful. You see, the school budget takes up more than half of what the town spends each year."

Nedrow explained, the advisory committee member listened as department heads came in to explain their needs.

"They all had good reasons," he said. "For instance, this year we added a counselor to the elementary school; that came about as a result of a lot of concerned parents, teachers and others telling us this was something that is needed.

"But again," he added, "for many of the people in town, their frame of reference is when they were in school, or when their children were in school.

"When they were in school," he explained, "there were probably only one or two children in each class that maybe came from a single-parent household, or from a divorce situation.

"The numbers are so much more prevalent now," he said. "It's just a different situation now, and you have to adapt to these situations."

Nedrow cited the implementation of a new after-school child care program, which he said will be self-sustaining, as an "appropriate extension of our educational program."

There will be a continuing evaluation of Cohasset's whole curriculum, Nedrow said.

In trying to maintain quality programs in the face of a shrinking student body, he explained, the administration will be trying experiments such as "overlapping" classes such as French 3 and French 4.

"The flexibility of our staff is really critical to us," he said.

Nedrow explained, the employee "headcount" and school programs would suffer under future funding cuts.

"Our headcount is a fixed cost, which takes up about 85 percent of our total budget," he explained, "and every year we face a contractual obligation to our employees.

"Next year," he said, "there will be a five-and-a-half percent increase. So, if the advisors and the town only give us three percent, there's no place to get it, and we'd have to cut back."

He explained, "We've got to maintain and heat the building, so when you really get down to it, the only place you really have any room or can even make any cuts is, you have to be more efficient with your headcount.

"That's when decisions get very, very difficult," he said.

Nedrow said he expects the new management team to come up with creative ways to deal with the impending dilemmas.

"We had talked," he said, "and we're hoping that because of the fact that all the local towns have gone with the same cable television company, that it might offer some opportunities for some of these higher math classes and higher language classes, where you can't get the numbers."

He explained, "Perhaps a consortium of sorts between Hingham, Hull, Scituate and ourselves might allow us to share teachers" over the airwaves.

"It makes sense," he said. "The sophistication is there."

FROM THE DIRECTOR

Medicaid Discrimination in Nursing Homes is of great concern today. State Secretary of Elder Affairs Richard H. Rowlands has alerted elders and their families to be aware of the possibility of Medicaid discrimination when applying for nursing home placement. Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti has announced the filing of consect judgements against several nursing homes. The homes were permanently enjoined from discriminating against Medicaid recipients in their admission practices and policies and agreed to pay fines and the costs of the investigation.

The Attorney General's office has prepared the following list of conduct which may be criminal under Massachusetts and federal laws, and other conduct which may give reason to suspect discrimination: IT IS A CRIMINAL ACT for nursing homes to willfully charge, solicit, or receive from a Medicaid recipient's family any gift, money, donation or other consideration as a precondition of admission to the nursing home.

IT IS A CRIMINAL ACT for a nursing home to require a Medicaid recipient or person eligible for Medicaid benefits to waive Medicaid benefits and pay the private rate to the home for a period of time before seeking Medicaid as a precondition of admission.

IT IS A DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICE to refuse or delay a person's admission to a nursing home solely because that person's care is to be paid by the Medicaid program.

IT IS A DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICE to move or transfer a patient residing in a nursing home from one setting to another (i.e., from a private or semi-private room to a ward) solely because that person's source of payment has changed to Medicaid. For more information on Nursing Homes call the E.O.E.A. 1-800-882-2003, or call the Senior Center at 383-9112.

WALKING — A LIFETIME ACTIVITY

Keep Moving is a program designed by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Elder Affairs to accomplish several important goals. It is designed to promote fitness as a lifestyle for people over 50 years old; to educate older persons in physical activities within the realm of their capabilities; to motivate individuals to accept responsibility for their health and to maintain a maximum level of physical ability and independence; to provide a productive social atmosphere for older adults; and to lay to rest this country's stereotype of older people as being both frail and helpless.

Kicked off with the Governor's Cup event in October 1984 a five-mile masters road race and a one-mile walk—Massachusetts Keep Moving program has been an extraordinary success. And Keep Moving walking clubs have been a key ingredient. The walking club portion of the program is a community based network of local groups that have been organized to motivate older persons and educate them to the exercise benefits of walking. Walking club leaders are volunteers trained in the medical, physical, and emotional implications of getting elders to walk for exercise. The program also includes a Walking club guidebook and logs to help people tract their progress.

Throughout the Commonwealth, some 2700 elders are enrolled in the walking clubs. The third annual Governor's Cup is scheduled for September 21, you can join in the fun by coming down to the Senior Center and signing-up for the great event.

FALL PROGRAM

In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts there are currently over 1,000 graduates of the two-day Massachusetts Elder Advocates Training Program. Recently, some of these graduates were asked the question: "How have you used the information learned at Elder Advocates session? While responses varied, every graduate reported that he or she had benefitted from participating in the training session.

Elder Advocates live all over Massachusetts and are active in many outside activites. An Elder Advocate may also be a Senior Aide, Elder Service Corps member, Ombudsman, or a member of AARP, MAOA, Mass Senior Action Council, Older Women's League, Gray Panthers, or a Local Council on Aging.

In September the beginning of a new Fall 1986 Mass. Elder Advocates Training Program will begin. Each fall this program attracts many new and interested senior Advocates while they provide ongoing advocacy training for previous graduates.

Throughout the Commonwealth, Elder Advocates make significant contributions, bringing knowledge and commitment to their own communities. Working together, we can influence issues facing elders and the community. Registration forms are available at the Senior Center. 383-9112.

Summer exchanges

The Cultural Exchange Committee is now taking applications from young people who wishto spend the summer of '87 in Souppes-sur-Loing, France.

The committee is working on several different types of summer exchanges with Cohasset's sister city. In addition to the individual exchange program which will be taking place throughout the year, Mayor Prudhomme has offered to place five of our young people in month long summer jobs as sailing instructors, swimming instructors, and camp counselors. Mayor Prudhomme has also invited twelve students, aged 12-15, to attend camp in Souppes the last two weeks of July.

Families or students interested in any aspect of the program should contact Judy Keim, 383-1026; Millie Mitman, 383-9766; or Marylou Lawrence, 383-6776.

In other business of the committee: a few Cohasset bi-centennial flags are still available for purchase—2' x 3' at $35 and 3' x 5' at $55. According to Mrs. Keim, chairman of the committee, "I doubt that we can have the flags reproduced again, and certainly never at this low price. So they are, in a sense, collector's items." Proceeds from the sale of the flags covers the reproduction costs.

The next meeting of the Cultural Exchange Committee will be Monday, September 15 at 8p.m. at the town hall. The public is welcome to attend.

Meet the candidates

Former Ambassador to Italy, the Honorable John A. Volpe, and all statewide and local candidates have been invited to attend a reception and buffet, Monday, Sept. 8, from 6 to 9 p.m. at the new Italian restaurant, Navona, located on the old Pilgrim Granite Quarry, Hingham, president Greg Hall announced.

In order for all to meet candidates prior to the primary, Tuesday, Sept. 16, all voters in Suffolk, Norfolk and Plymouth have been invited to attend this reception, Hall added. He also said that this reception is open to the public especially to newcomers in the area.

For reservations and further information the following may be contacted: Greg Hall 749-3324 and Gloria Jantzen 749-1954 of Hingham; Barbara MacSwan 335-9508 of Weymouth; Mimi Sundstrom, Milton 696-2246; Julie Guild, Cohasset 383-6443; Pat Buckley Cohasset 383-0304; Ed O'Sullivan, Duxbury 585-5890; Barbara Carney, Marshfield 834-9867; Joan Francis, Scituate 545-1361; Kathy Roberts, Quincy 479-8280; or Marion Boch, Norwood 762-4555.

The charm of New England will be exemplified in the saltboxes, capes and colonials. Features will inlcude a mixture of wood, clapboards, bricks, handsplit shakes, fieldstone, multi-paned authentic colonial windows, wide chimneys, cathedral ceilings, wood roofs, hand-hewn beams and wide pine floors, to name a few.

The shops will be geared to the middle to upper income shopper found in this affluent area. Norwell Village will draw from the booming South Shore area and, in addition, its strategic location near major highways will produce a draw from the entire Greater Boston area and from the Cape Cod area to the South.

Eighty percent polled want Pilgrim Plant closed

By Mike Berger
Mariner Staff

Eighty percent of those people who answered the seven-town Mariner poll concerning the reopening of the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant said the facility should be permanently closed.

Fifty-seven people who answered the poll said the inherent risk of a nuclear power plant accident at the Plymouth site is too great and the plant should be permanently closed.

Fourteen people or 20 percent of the total poll responders said the plant should reopen after the Nuclear Regulatory Commission certifies the plant as safe.

The poll ran during July (four issues) in the Marshfield, Pembroke, Norwell, Hanover, Scituate, Cohasset and Hingham Mariners. Although not scientific, every effort was made to distinguish identical poll results.

Over a month's time, the nuclear question posed caused one of the greatest reader responses (71) to a Mariner poll.

The following are the responses to those people who took the time to comment on the question.

YES, REOPEN THE PLANT

"Inevitably, our principal source of energy has to be nuclear; if not in our lifetime it will become during our children's lifetimes."

"This plant and others threatened with closing will be needed in a decade more or less as a major source of energy."

"It provides jobs for a lot of people. It provides revenue and I feel it isn't a threat because we use radiation to fight cancer. So who are the people fooling? I would even work there."

Another reader said although 60 nuclear plants are in the U.S., relatively few have been damaged with no casualties. "Why worry about cheap Russian work," said the reader.

"It's no time for uninformed hysteria or political wrangling. We need factual pros and cons. Fossil fuel is finite and polluting; we can't deactivate nuclear waste yet we demand energy for civilization as we know it."

"We need the power," said one reader while others responded, "Absolutely, as soon as possible" and "The plant is safe, the design is proven and the power is sorely needed!"

"People are overreacting since the accident in Russia but the truth is we need nuclear power plants now and even more in the future."

R. M. Campbell, of Cohasset who has written several letters to the editor in past editions defending nuclear power remarked in his poll answer, "I am dismayed at the credence given the critics, many of whom are obvious charlatans. Nuclear power is here to stay and ignorance and political opportunism won't make it go away."

NO — CLOSE THE FACILITY

These are the comments of those readers who felt the plant should be closed permanently .

"The world will end soon enough without their help."

"We know electricty is costly but the possibility of a holocaust is far more costly. Safety and peace of mind is far more important."

"I work at Myles Standish State Forest area (Camp Squanto) and if there were an emergency, I would have no way to safety; not to mention the boy scout camps in the area."

"No good evacuation plans - nothing clear to follow and too many people to move at one time."

"I am about to be newly married. I worry about health risks for both myself and my children when they are born."

"This area is too densely settled. In an emergency the people could not be removed from the endangered area."

"The benefits of 'cheap energy' will never outweigh the 250 years of 'no man's land' contamination probability of a pressure reactor vessel melt down."

"Boston Edison's lack of publicly discussed plans for evacuation within the 20-mile radius is criminal."

"Nuclear power is unsafe. We should develop solar power."

"I feel that the potential of a nuclear accident is far too great to allow the reopening. Boston Edison, the state of Mass. and indeed, the South Shore is not prepared for this very dangerous situation."

"I think that no nuke plant should be in operation until ways have been found to neutralize the waste. Rubbish collected should be put to use to make power."

"I feel the housing market has been adversely affected by it."

"It never should have been built, especially at its present location (bordering on a peninsula)."

"I'm thankful for the opportunity to still be able to vote No! No thanks to the management at P.N.P.P."

"My husband and I are senior citizens and hate to think our grandchildren will have to face the horror."

"I am amazed that Boston Edison Co. would allow hazards. I thought for many years that they were competent. I am extremely distressed with U.S.A. and Soviet engineers."

"I have heard stories from plant employees of too little supervision and of employees not being conscientious of their job responsibility which creates a dangerous situation for all."

"Even if the N.R.C. certifies the plant as safe, the evacuation plans are impossible to implement, particularly as they stand now."

"Why should the NRC and or any public utility hold the future of our planet in their hands?"

"I am terrified. We don't need it!"

"If the money spent on nuclear power plants was put to use to find alternative safe sources of energy, we might get somewhere. People better wise up to all the political crap going on."

"Plants such as these are a menace to our communities. I wish to close ALL NUCLEAR PLANTS. Look for alternative plans for energy."

"How can they say electricity is cheaper with the plant? The costs of building and maintaining nuclear plants are astronomical and must certainly offset any so called cheap power."

"My husband and I both feel strongly that this plant should never reopen! The article in Life Magazine (August) about Chernobyl (which is not an impossibility in this country), says only part of the story!"

And finally this comment from a Scituate reader.

"I was so pleased to see your survey in the Mariner. The Pilgrim plant has been a source of concern to me for some time now (actually since it opened)."

"We have a small committee here in Scituate that has tried to keep the public informed while urging them to write Washington. After all it is completely controlled on a federal level. "

"Keep beating the drum. We need to put the issue in the public eye and see that it stays there."

Edison info. booklet mailed to area residents

Boston Edison emergency operations reminds residents of Plymouth, Carver, Kingston, Duxbury and the southern tip of Marshfield to save the emergency information booklet mailed to them last week.

The booklet from the Massachusetts Civil Defense Agency describes what residents should do in case there is an accident at the Pilgrim nuclear power station in Plymouth or any other emergency affecting these communities.

The brochure outlines specific information and instructions including emergency warning signals, evacuation routes, and special needs preparation.

According to the Civil Defense, in the unlikely event of an emergency, the most important action residents can take is to turn their radio to the local emergency broadcast stations, WPLM-AM 1390, WPLM-FM 99.1, WATD-FM 95.9, or WROR-FM 98.5, and follow the instructions provided.

Anyone who has not received the Emergency Information Booklet, can do so by calling Roger Silva, Boston Edison emergency preparedness coordinator, at 747-3449.

Many government officials have been invited. Mayor MacCauley of Quincy will receive a citation for his support of the organization.

The dance will feature line, circle and ball room to the music of Art Brickley and his Dixie-Land Band.

The Hingham-Cohasset RSVP office is located in the Hingham Council on Aging's Hersey House at 229 North St. There are interesting assignments for those desiring to join. Call 749-0582 for information.

Strawberry Parfait whips Scituate in softball

By Bob Briggs
Mariner Correspondent

It had everything that a major league baseball game could offer: heavy hitting, stellar fielding, great pitching, close calls, screaming fans, extra innings, even a camera crew and special commentator.

In the end it was the team sponsored by Carmine Carlucci, owner of Strawberry Parfait of Cohasset, which beat DFU from Scituate to take home the Scituate Men's Softball League Championship trophy.

It all started back in June when fifteen teams got their rosters together and practiced a few times before the 18 game regular season schedule. After the regular season only eight teams continued into the playoffs. After Monday night, only one team remained.

"It was a tough series, but it is good to have finished the season and won the championship," said Strawberry Parfait coach Robert Silvia. Silvia broke his thumb half way through the season and was relegated to cheering on his team from the sidelines.

His counterpart, Matt Nelson of DFU, pitched for his team and helped keep them in the game with several outstanding defensive plays.

The game was the third of the best-of-five championship series. The Parfait team had won the first two games 3-2 and 6-5 and were looking to win the league title in their first season playing together.

It had all the excitement you could ask for, starting with a towering home run in the first inning by Jay Fiori to put Parfait up 1-0.

A great throw following a catch by Joe Dooley to Billy Fallon kept things unchanged until the bottom of the third inning when DFU, led by a sacrifice fly by Mike Barrows, rallied with four runs to take the lead for the first time. While Dean "Rocket" Harrold kept the DFU's bats silent for the next four innings, Parfait climbed back into the game with single runs in the fourth and sixth innings. They tied the game in the seventh.

A dramatic double play in the bottom of the seventh stopped DFU and pushed the game into extra innings.

In the top of the ninth John Buckley led off with a single. Billy (4 for 4) Williamson moved him to third with a single. Mike "Mota" McCarthy brought home the fifth run with a sacrifice fly. Kevin Dooley doubled in the winning run.

In the bottom of the ninth DFU tried to rally but could only manage one run as McCarthy scored on a single by Stone. The game ended on a very close play at first which could have gone either way.

"This has been an exciting final series and probably the toughest games I have ever worked," said Earl Love who, along with Frank Pamphret, umpired the game. "The close calls are tough," continued Love, "but you have to make them the best you can without any favoritism."

As Pumphret said, "This was a battle between the two best teams in the league. After playing each other five times this year, only one run separates them." DFU won the two regular season meetings between the two clubs 9-8 and 8-7.

The Strawberry Parfait team is a group of veterans playing together for the first time. They were a team full of team players. Everyone contributed throughout the season.

In the playoffs they were led by the oustanding pitching of Dean "Old Man" Harrold who compiled a 7-0 record in the playoffs and Paul Buckley who was "outstanding with an average near .600 in the playoffs," according to Silvia.

Parfait beat the Bell Buoy and the Knights of Columbus on their way to the finals.

DFU, with players ranging in age from 20 to 30 years old, made it to the finals for the second straight year by beating Reynolds Package Store and the Red Lion Inn.

A young, emotional team, their leader is Nelson who is their coach, captain, pitcher and epitomizes their desire. It was his pitching and leadership that forced the opposition to go to extra innings before winning.

"We have a young team and had a good year. We will be back next year," said Nelson.

As with any game there were those who disagreed with the outcome.

Eddie Patterson thought the umpires had made too many good calls for Parfait. "Congratulations Parfait, but wait until next year," said Patterson. He added, "Matt Nelson deserves special mention. He has been the heart and soul of DFU all year."

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

State primaries: An uncensored warm-up, part I

I'm old enough to remember when politics were such that the night before any major primary or final election a great crowd would gather outside the old G&G Delicatessen in Mattapan to rally and hear and see the candidates. I recall campaigning at the G&G in 1967 for John Saltonstall, a Boston City Council candidate. My job was to hold a sign that said: "Saltonstall—#59 on the ballot." Today the same ballot wouldn't number more than ten candidates.

As recently as five years ago when the Dukakis-King rematch was in the making, the Mariner office was constantly getting calls from would-be statesmen looking for an interview and a mention. This year, with the Primary but two weeks away and with Mariner Newspapers representing eleven communities instead of six, our phones have been virtually silent. Gerard D'Amico and Evelyn Murphy, candidates for the vacuous office of lt. governor, dropped by briefly while doing cameos at the Marshfield Fair. The single candidate who bothered to ask for an extensive interview was Maura Hennigan, candidate for state auditor. She got it—we are always glad to meet the candidates—and if my comments next week about the auditor's race reflect a fondness for her it is primarily due to the fact that whereas the other candidates were among the missing, Hennigan persisted as a candidate should.

Perhaps the other candidates were absorbed in the pennant race. If so the public will be forgiven if the heretofore unknown Spike Owen (a successful candidate for shortstop) obtains wider name recognition that most of our political hopefuls. Nevertheless, it is just at such times when the public is mindless of political developments, that, for good or ill, important nominations can take place. It was in such a primary in 1978 when Gov. Dukakis fell on his face, and in such a primary in 1964 when Gov. Peabody fell on his.

This, then, could be an important election; therefore, in the two weeks before the Primary I'd like to run down the list of candidates with you, tossing in some uncensored comments about them.

Governor—The Democratic candidate for governor is Mike Dukakis. If you haven't heard of him you're beyond any help I can give you. He is a brilliant, handsome, dedicated public servant in the true sense. He has no interest whatever in perquisites or wealth. He is a devoted family man who retains a real personal modesty after 25 years in government and with accomplishments that would make lesser men vain.

My only serious quarrel with him is over the billion dollars I feel he owes me. The Commonwealth he governs is more wealthy by far than that which his approximately 64 predecessors governed. This has allowed him to get away with increasing the size of state government while concomitantly reducing taxes. Yet, as Texas has proven, bursts of prosperity are never endless. When our boom ends, as it will, state government that is about a billion dollars per annum too big may cause the history writers to be unkinder to Dukakis than contemporaries who have elected him to office. Like President Reagan he is popular, and deservedly so; but like President Reagan he has an Achilles heel (Reagan's is the deficit) that could haunt him when history asks: "Did this man act responsibly?"

The Republican candidate, sort-of, is George Kariotis, who is a friend and former colleague of former Gov. King. Kariotis is not one of those "friends" who did King in when he was governor. He served the King administration with distinction as Sec. of Economic Affairs, and is probably responsible for some of the prosperity that makes his rival Dukakis so formidable an incumbent.

Kariotis is "sort-of" the Republican candidate because he is not on the ballot. If you are Republican you will have to write his name in lest one of two other candidates whom I will call tweedle-dum and tweedle-dishonest, whose names do appear on the ballot, get the Republican nomination. Kariotis is a very good man. He doesn't have Dukakis' facile brilliance, but he has more of what I would call "mature wisdom." However, his late-starting campaign has been ineffective, and if in the next few weeks he isn't able to campaign effectively one must wonder if he would be able to get a handle on state government in January should he actually win the election.

Lieutenant Governor—No, this is not a Greek election, but the Republican candidate for lt. governor is Nicholas Nikitas, a Dartmouth graduate and a one-time legislative candidate from Kingston. Nikitas is a good and able man if a long-winded speaker, and the sort of non-Yankee moderate conservative the Republican Party needs to put forward if it is to return from exile.

The Democratic candidates are Gerard D'Amico and Evelyn Murphy. D'Amico won the endorsement of the state convention by rallying the Beacon Hill crowd and stroking the liberals. Murphy blew the convention by overreaching on the gender issue—she implied that all good feminists were obligated to support her. She also paid at the convention for the pro-business positions she took as a Dukakis cabinet secretary.

Both candidates have run campaigns that have been quite successful in hiding the respective abilities of the candidates, which are considerable. The only reason we need to be interested in the fight between them is the remote possibility that lightning could strike Dukakis—either on the golf course or at the Democratic National Convention in 1988. If you are Democratic you must ask yourself: "Which of the above would I like to have as governor." By dint of experience, maturity, and a slightly less pronounced propensity to posture, I'd prefer Murphy.

Attorney General—The Democratic candidates for attorney general are Jo-Ann Shotwell, an assistant to the retiring Atty. Gen. Francis Bellotti, and James Shannon, a former congressman from Lawrence who overreached when he ran for the U.S. Senate in 1984. Neither is especially qualified. Shannon, by dint of political ability and experience is the front-runner, but Shotwell remains true to her name: she has a shot.

The choice is between a follower (Shotwell) of an attorney general under whose aegis the only prosecution of a political corruption case in twelve years was the disastrous Revenue Department case; and a boy (Shannon) who has never prosecuted a case period. Neither of them is qualified, although we must remember that sometimes unqualified people go on to do fine work. Of the two I think the greater risk and opportunity lie with Shannon. He is more likely to be the puerile posturer who goes after Boston Edison while leaving the Mafia alone, but he is also more likely to mature into brilliance. Shotwell is more likely to be thorough and competent, but pedestrian.

The class of this race is the Republican candidate, Edward Harrington. Harrington is a richly experienced investigator and prosecutor who deeply understands the fabric of crime and corruption in Massachusetts. As attorney general he would be the perfect counterpoint to a third Dukakis administration that would be honest, but with an eye to national politics, unwilling to rock the boat with deep probes into the workings of state government. Harrington, however, has made all the right enemies in his long career, enemies who are apoplectic about his candidacy. The evil will work against Harrington; and oddly, in their naivete so will many of the good. Moreover, to date Harrington's campaign has not been effective. As of this writing his chances of winning are not good.

Next week I will go into the races for State Treasurer, State Auditor, and Secretary of State.

Samaritans announce fall volunteer recruitment drive

Do you want to feel good about yourself? Do you have a few hours to spare each week or each month? The Samaritans of the South Shore serve 14 towns in the area but take calls from anyone who wishes to talk with a volunteer befriender regardless of where he/she calls from. Samaritans of the South Shore will be holding a fall volunteer recruitment drive in early September and is a chapter of the worldwide suicide prevention organization begun in England in 1953. The mission of the organization is to assist persons who are suicidal, despairing or in distress and thus reduce the incidence of suicide.

Samaritans of the South Shore began operations almost one year ago in Hall's Corner, Duxbury, and are eagerly looking forward to the upcoming move to the Plymouth County Public Safety Building on Obery Street in Plymouth. Volunteers answer phones on shifts ranging from one or two hours to overnights. Hours are flexible and accommodate the availability of the volunteer. Each volunteer is thoroughly trained prior to actually answering the phones and new training classes are planned for early this fall. Training consists of information and education sessions outlining the types of calls received and potential telephone situations commonly arising on a shift.

Training in how to handle these situations is both instructional as well as practical. Topics as depression, suicide, the alcoholic caller and befriending are only some of what is covered in a comprehensive two-day training session.

Trainees will also have an opportunity to role play situations with more experienced volunteers so that they may both observe and practice how best to befriend a troubled caller. All volunteers maintain strict anonymity with callers by using only their first name and a Samaritan's volunteer number. Samaritan volunteers are also available to work with school systems or individual schools to befriend young people who have experienced the death of a classmate.

The most important qualification for a potential volunteer to possess is a caring, concerned attitude toward those in need. Anyone wishing additional information on becoming a Samaritan can call the Samaritan office at 934-7143 between 9 a.m. and noon daily. Anyone wishing to become a Samaritan volunteer is invited to come to our informational/recruitment days Wednesday, Sept. 3 from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., or Saturday, Sept. 6 from 9 a.m. to noon at First Parish Church, Town Square, Plymouth.

MUSINGS by John H. Cutler

☐ If you want to succeed in politics, go to church regularly. Mayor Curley used to walk down towards the front pews in creaky shoes to attract attention.

☐ If pro is the opposite of con, Progress is the opposite of Congress.

☐ Someone said facism was communism in a hurry.

☐ I believed him until he added, "To be honest with you."

☐ Erma Bombeck speaking: "Suburbs are small, controlled communities where for the most part everyone has the same living standards, the same weeds, the same number of garbage cans, the same house plans, and the same level in the septic tank."

☐ If you are satisfied with what you have done you'll never be acclaimed for anything you may do later.

☐ Some good advice from a philosopher named Henri Bergson: "Think like a man of action and act like a man of thought." Reminds me of a remark made of Unamuno, a Spanish philosopher: "Live as if you were going to die tomorrow, and study as if you were going to live forever."

☐ Quote from an essay by Pico Iyer: "Tibet was stormed by the Chinese and now the dream-of-Shangri-La is vanished forever; Cambodia was caught in a cross fire, and an earthly paradise so gentle that ricksha drivers were said to tip their passengers is now a land of skulls."

☐ In his sophomore year at Yale, Lucius Beebe was dismissed for impersonating the head of Yale's Divinity School. In this disguise he threw an empty whiskey bottle on the stage. When he switched to Harvard, President Angell of Yale apologized to Harvard's President Lowell.

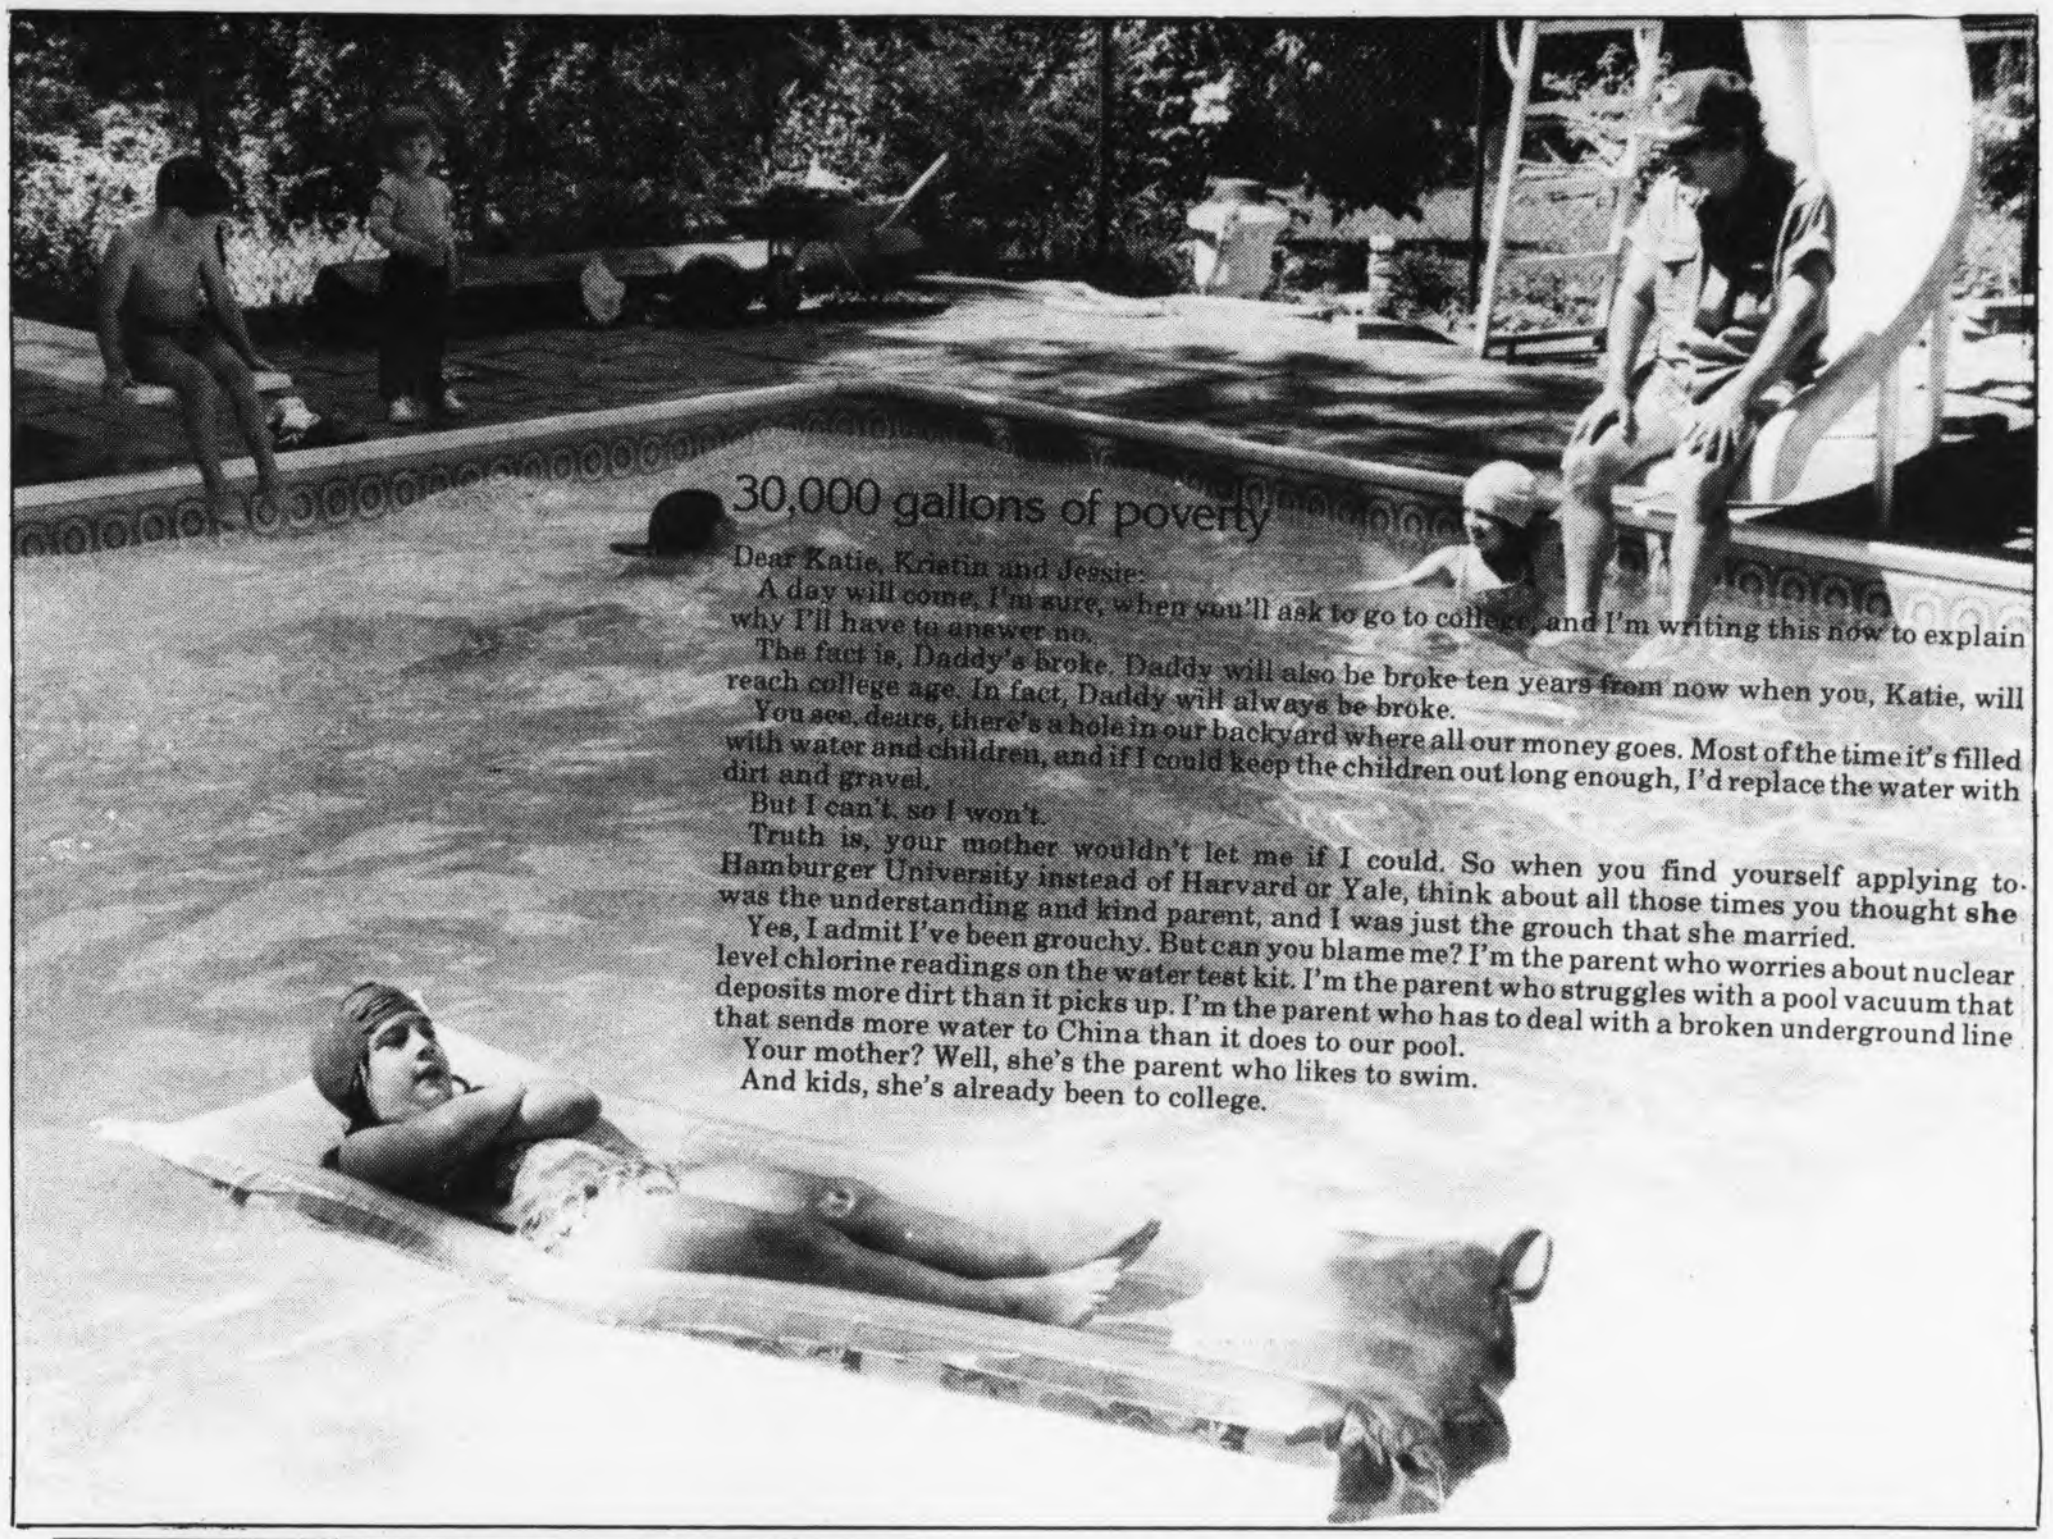
A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone



30,000 gallons of poverty

Dear Katie, Kristin and Jessie:

A day will come, I'm sure, when you'll ask to go to college, and I'm writing this now to explain why I'll have to answer no.

The fact is, Daddy's broke. Daddy will also be broke ten years from now when you, Katie, will reach college age. In fact, Daddy will always be broke.

You see, dears, there's a hole in our backyard where all our money goes. Most of the time it's filled with water and children, and if I could keep the children out long enough, I'd replace the water with dirt and gravel.

But I can't, so I won't.

Truth is, your mother wouldn't let me if I could. So when you find yourself applying to Hamburger University instead of Harvard or Yale, think about all those times you thought she was the understanding and kind parent, and I was just the grouch that she married.

Yes, I admit I've been grouchy. But can you blame me? I'm the parent who worries about nuclear level chlorine readings on the water test kit. I'm the parent who struggles with a pool vacuum that deposits more dirt than it picks up. I'm the parent who has to deal with a broken underground line that sends more water to China than it does to our pool.

Your mother? Well, she's the parent who likes to swim.

And kids, she's already been to college.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

Lightening up the load in the kitchen

"Simplify! Simplify!" was Thoreau's way of coping and a maxim that comes to mind sometimes when I'm in the kitchen. Tips to help to lighten difficult or time-consuming tasks are handy and here are a few I jotted down to pass on to you. All I ask in return is that you share your helpful ideas on food and entertaining with us.

Bag it. Save nylon net bags that onions come in to hold small pieces of cooking equipment like pastry bag tips, cookie cutters, tart shells, or candy molds. Tie the ends and hang from a hook or store in kitchen drawer or cabinet.

Your bean pot. An old bean pot makes an attractive container on your kitchen counter to hold your everyday cooking utensils. Looks pretty, too, as a container for fall flowers for your table.

Air fresheners. Herbs or spices tossed on the embers of a fire or boiled in water on your stove releases a delightful fragrance throughout the house.

Cupcake Drips. Pouring cupcake batter from a pitcher instead of ladling it out of a mixing bowl fills cupcake pans or paper liners with fewer drips.

Men who enjoy cooking usually have an easy time of it, for they have been known to prepare their masterpiece and then walk out and leave the mess behind. Wonder if that's what Richard Ellis did when he made this pie and won third prize at the Marshfield Fair's Bake-Off for Men.

SHOO–FLY PIE

1 unbaked pie shell
3 c. flour
3/4 tsp. cinnamon
1 c. boiling water
1 c. ea. brown sugar, shortening & molasses
1 tsp. baking soda

Mix flour and sugar in bowl. Add shortening & cinnamon. Mix 'til it forms a crumb mixture. Remove a cup of mixture and reserve for topping. Mix soda with boiling water and add molasses. Stir into flour mixture. Pour into unbaked pie shell. Sprinkle reserved mixture on top. Bake 350 degrees for one hour, checking after 45 min. with toothpick.

I walked into a favorite little store the other day and almost went into reverse, for I was surrounded on all sides by Christmas gifts, papers and cards. Reeling into the post office did nothing to squelch my irritation at this infringement on our summer season, for waiting to be picked up was our first Christmas gift catalogue. Much more appealing was a note from Fran Svelnis who has done so much to renew interest in the Marshfield Fair's baking contest.

As chairman of the country arts committee for the last few year, Fran has kindled a great deal of enthusiasm as anyone knows who visited the huge exhibition hall. Earl Woodward climbed the stairs on crutches with his plate of bar cookies which won a second prize in the men's division.

ANGEL SLICES

Cream until well blended:
1/2 c. butter
1/4 c. sugar
Beat in well:
1 egg
Combine:
1 1/4 c. sifted all-purpose flour
1/8 tsp. salt
Add these dry ingredients to the butter mixture, blending well and adding:
1/2 tsp. vanilla
With your hands pat dough even in ungreased 9 X 12" pan.
Bake in 350 oven for approx. 15 min. Spread dough-lined pan with the following:
2 beaten eggs
1 1/2 c. ea. brown sugar & chopped pecans
2T flour
1/2 tsp. ea. baking powder & salt (latter is optional)
1 tsp. vanilla
Bake approx. 25 min. When cool, ice with 1 1/2 c. confectioners sugar thinned to spreading consistency with lemon juice.
Cut into oblongs.

Other tips to lighten your day:

In the chips. Substitute crushed tortilla chips for crax or bread crumbs to coat poultry or fish, or as a crunchy topping on casseroles.

Sweet note. Colored sugar used to decorate Christmas cookies looks pretty any time of the year in a sugar bowl and adds a festive note when you serve tea or coffee to guest.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Losing the battle in the Day of the Wrecker

"Someone once said," The Dragon mused, "that no object is so beautiful that under certain circumstances it will not look ugly.

"I think that's what happened to all the cars on our property. Once the darlings of the showrooms, they've managed to surpass mere ugliness. They've advanced all the way to loathsome."

"You quoted Oscar Wilde," I told him. "And I've got a better one for you. 'He that looketh upon a fair woman looseth a fender.' "

The Dragon looked impressed. "Did the Bible say that?"

I shook my head. "No. Your son Skip did. Just after he waved at some girls he knows while he was backing out of the driveway. Only he didn't put it quite in those words."

"And I know what he backed into, too," the Dragon roared. "That does it. We have entirely too many cars on our property that don't run and that make it impossible to manipulate the ones that do work, and I'm getting rid of them. I'm going to call Paul Young and have him take them all away and turn them into an assortment of coffee table ornaments. Right now."

"We already have an automative coffee table ornament," I reminded him. "Jay's been working on his transmission in our living room for a couple of months now. The way I see it, we either plant marigolds in the hollows in the casing, or we spray paint it and tell people it's a sculpture we picked up for an investment."

"I have a better idea," the Dragon muttered darkly. "Paul Young can take that away, too."

"Are you going to have them take Jay's Scout?' I asked.

"He thought for a minute. "No. I do have a sense of tradition. When the Scout died, Jay pushed it to the back of our property. It's been there so long that trees and weeds and brambles have grown up around it. The neighborhood kids speak of it in awed whispers as 'the car that lives in the woods.' Sort of a South Shore verson of "Christine."

"I can relate to that, " I told him. "Which cars are you getting rid of?"

"Let's see," he mused. "There's Skip's Ford, Jay's Buick. Pat's Pinto and Skip's Toyota.

"Over the past few months I've already quietly gotten rid of two Corvairs, two Dodge Darts, one Buick LeSabre, one Chevelle and one Ford station wagon known familiarly as 'Tank.' No one even noticed they were missing until they wanted to cannibalize them for parts."

I nodded, "Okay. But I think I'll go yard saling. I don't want my car in the driveway during the 'Day of the Wrecker.' "

When I returned there wasn't a car to be seen. Carefully avoiding a drunkenly listing mailbox with a streak of paint the color of a late, great Ford, I parked my Dodge and went into the house.

I was surprised to see the Dragon watching a rerun of "Charlie's Angels" and asked him what he was doing home.

"I live here," he replied.

"I know," I conceded. "But where's your car? Did you loan it to one of the kids?"

"Not a chance. They're all on their own. My car's right in the driveway where it belongs."

He watched Farah Fawcett tell Kate Jackson that Jacqueline Smith hadn't phoned, then sat upright.

"Isn't it?" he asked warily.

I shook my head sadly, and he catapulted to his feet.

"Call Paul Young's," he yelled as he ran out the door.

"Come back!" he shouted, approaching a speed he hadn't reached since his days on the high school track team.

"Come back! You took the wrong car!"

I sighed. He that looketh upon fair angels loseth an entire car.

Writing on writing with style

By Nancy Anne Dawe

When John Cutler writes on writing, he knows what he's writing about. Founder, publisher and editor of the weekly newspaper the Duxbury Clipper, Cutler has also been a syndicated columnist (twice), and authored 10 books. They include biographies of some famous Bostonians: the late Cardinal Cushing, Mayor Honey Fitz (a biography of Rose Kennedy's father), former Senator Ed Brooke — as well as the ghost-written James Michael Curley autobiography, I'd Do It Again!

"But the one book I always wanted to write was a simple one on writing itself — one that would teach a person to avoid the most common errors I've observed through 35 years of Clipper editing."

His book Tips On Writing, A Sound, Engaging Guide To Writing, is a sprightly, little paperback written in collaboration with his onetime-editor, Monroe Stearns. A New Yorker whom Cutler met in 1948 at the Breadloaf Writer's Conference in Vermont, Stearns has equally impressive credentials: once chief trade editor of publishers Bobbs Merrill and Prentice Hall, writing teacher at school and college levels, and author of 32 books of his own, including some translations.

They conceived Tips On Writing "as a guide for writers by writers," whether those writers are junior high, high school, or college students, businessmen, neophyte or professional scribes; anyone, in fact, who wants to produce "literate, accurate written communications in such everyday and universal requirements as a school theme, a personal or business letter, an inter-office memorandum, a business report, a news release or a prepared speech."

During World War II Cutler spent the last year in the Navy Department as a member of an elite writing corps that included John Jennings, Jesse Stuart, Donald Kehoe, Hannibal Coons and Robert Lewis Taylor. Cutler wrote speeches and reports for Admiral Ernest King, Chief of Naval Operations; Vice-Admirals Aubrey Fitch and Marc Mitscher, when they were Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Air; Undersecretary of the Navy Artemus Gates, and Assistant Secretary John Sullivan. Cutler and Hannibal Coons received a Letter of Commendation for writing a brief History of Naval Aviation in the War Against Japan.

"It's the kind of book I wish I'd had when I started writing more than 45 years ago," says Cutler. "It would have saved me many embarrassments...criticisms from editors and from really sloppy writing.

"I wrote my first column for the old Boston Transcript, and when I compared what was published to what I had written, I was dismayed. Why did the editor change my beautiful prose? Soon I realized my prose was pompous and flowery. I had been showing off.

"What we especially wanted to do with this book — or booklet, really, for it fits in your pocket — was teach concision. You can be concise in a volume and diffuse in a line."

Cutler first thought of the book years earlier after addressing over 50 Plymouth County teachers of English in a seminar at Hingham High School "I had written magazine articles for Esquire, Colliers, Argosy, Liberty, Reader's Digest,Ford Times, and The American Magazine, and other publications, and told the group how I'd written pieces, giving some of my writing ideas." Surprised when the teachers asked him what he meant by "putting an adjective in a noun," and "an adverb in the verb," some of my warning he explained: "If you want to say a person is worthless or good-for-nothing, don't use several words. Use 'oaf.' Don't say, 'he swayed from side to side.' Say, 'he staggered.' "

"But I wondered, 'Why wouldn't they know that.' "

Cutler then read an article in Harpers entitled Why Johnny Can't Read Good, which said one reason was the use of multiple choice tests. "My generation, on the other hand, had had to write essays, which is the basis for all good writing. Also, students notoriously can't write usually because their teachers can't write. Not because they're not intelligent — but because they haven't been taught, either. I wasn't a good writer, even after graduating from Harvard with my Bachelor's, Master's and PhD degrees!"

Cutler, while editing, noticed a consistent pattern of mistakes — redundancy, over-use of the passive voice, mixed metaphors and misplaced modifiers. So he wrote, and ran in the Clipper, a series of discursive essays on writing that elicited enough positive comment to become the book's foundation. "Then I thought of Monroe Stearns, a masterful organizer and better editor than I, and sent him all the material. He revamped and reorganized the manuscript, adding a great deal more.

"Our book is an adjunct to other books on writing and isn't meant to take the place of a pedantic grammar. It's a sort of short cut to good writing: not a reference book, but a series of practical suggestions on how to improve in an hour or 2 or 3."

Its 81 pages — with chapters on Words, The Correct Use Of Words, Sentences, Paragraphs, Style, Composition, Usage, and Punctuation and Capitalization — are packed with facts, "but it has light touches, too, rather than being one of those grammars that dulls the senses." There is sheer hilarity in some samples of misplaced modifiers:

Wanted: Boy to deliver oysters that can ride a bicycle.

Meals are prepared under the supervision of a dietitian packaged in a disposable styrofoam container.

For Sale: Piano by a lady going to Europe with carved legs.

For Sale: St. Bernard. Will eat anything. Fond of children.

The book has been praised by Duxbury's former superintendent of schools, Seldon Whitaker, who wrote, "We are very pleased with this publication." Alison Arnold, former society editor of the Boston Herald and Boston Globe (now a Clipper columnist) wrote: "Most newspapers have for their reporters what they call a Style Book, which explains their preference for writing. But this little book is written for everyone. It is amusing and easy to read and is the answer to all the puzzling questions about writing." Adds Francis Russell, author of Tragedy In Dedham, Shadow of Blooming Grove and Sacco And Vanzetti: The Case Resolved, "Every young writer learning his trade should have it on his shelf near to Strunk, Fowler, Webster's Collegiate, the Concise Oxford, and Partridge's Dictionary of Cliches.

Published on the Clipper presses, Tips on Writing is available locally at the Clipper office and at Westwinds Bookshop.

Art Center launches capital drive

In its quest for an expanded and updated facility, the South Shore Art Center has launched a major capital fund drive this summer to finance its new Cohaset Village location.

To date the Center has raised over $500,000 towards its $950,000 goal to renovate and expand the former Tantillo Auto Body Shop, located on Pleasant Street, around the corner from their present building.

According to plans developed by Hingham architect Vecvold Strekalovsky, the new two and a half-story, 8,000 square foot art center will house four large studio-classrooms, a central two-story gallery space, a gallery-members room for community functions, an expanded gift shop, more storage space and improved administrative offices.

The building will expand the Center's current space and will continue to be easily accessible to all its South Shore teachers, students, exhibitors and gallery-goers.

A recent challenge grant from the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. helped push the total funds raised over the halfway mark. The Center must match the grant with public contributions. It is hoped that all South Shore residents will want to participate in helping the Art Center meet the challenge. Work will begin on the site in mid-September with an October ground-breaking ceremony planned.

Heading the fundraising effort are Mrs. A. Werk Cook as honorary chairman and Mrs. N. Frank Neer, Jr., chairman. Working with them on the committee are Mrs. Edward F. Logan, chairman of individual gifts, and Mrs. Thomas B. Williams and Stan Nikkel, co-chairmen of board gifts.

Increased enrollment and participation in the Center's workshops and classes emphasized the need for an expanded facility. The growth of the Center during the past 30 years has paralleled the population boom along the South Shore. The new Center hopes to meet the cultural and artistic needs of the many communities it serves, including members from: Hingham, Norwell, Scituate, Hanover, Hull, Weymouth, Braintree and Marshfield.

Ubaldo DiBenedetto, former South Shore Art Center President; Mrs. Edward F. Logan, chairman of Capital Campaign Individual Gifts; and Center Recording Secretary Anita Franks, discuss Capital Campaign strategies at a recent meeting.

The Capital Campaign will depend on the supportive partnership of individuals, businesses and corporations to meet its $950,000 goal. The fundraising will continue this fall throughout all the South Shore communities. The center is confident of reaching that goal and opening its new facility in 1987.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

Return of Coho Salmon to the South Shore

Coho Salmon, also referred to as Silver Salmon, are one of the most important native game fish in the Pacific Northwest. There, Coho are widely sought for their tasty meat. This popular sport fish is respected for their power, always fighting hard and challenging the most skillful anglers.

In the early 1960's, streams and rivers feeding the Great Lakes were stocked with these fish. Results were excellent. The successful management of salmon in the Great Lakes opened the way for other stocking programs such as the one established sixteen years ago by the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries in the North River.

In 1969, the Massachusetts program began when the state purchased eggs from Washington, a state well known for its salmon programs. These eggs were hatched and reared at local hatcheries.

A year and a half later, the small fish were released in the North River in Pembroke. Over the years, more and more Coho were raised and stocked. Returning fish established the basis for a Massachusetts strain of the Coho Salmon.

Salmon fishing has been on an upswing aided by the redesigning of a hatchery to rear Coho fry, better management strategies, and a more knowledgable fishing community. In 1985, nearly 2,000 Salmon returned to the North River providing excellent sport-fishing from September to January. This fishery should continue to improve and become stronger this year.

Coho Salmon are not an easy fish to catch. Salmon fishing requires hard work as well as a good understanding of the fish and basic fishing tactics. This week's article will concentrate on the former. If the angler understands the spawning habits of the Coho, chances of catching the fish will be greatly enhanced. Next week, fishing strategies will be presented.

In the wilds, Coho salmon eggs hatch and the fry spend the first part of their lives in fresh water. When they are approximately one and one half years old and some five inches long, the small Coho, known as smolts at this stage, begin to swim towards the ocean where they will spend the next fifteen months of their lives. Although little information is known about their habits at sea, Coho feed heavily and grow rapidly. After spending a year and a half in the cold ocean waters, the Coho return to the fresh water tributaries in which they were born, to spawn. Like all Pacific Salmon, Coho undergo severe biological changes during this spawning and all die. However, their offspring continue to perpetuate the species by returning to the same tributaries.

The North River's Salmon Program follows this life cycle with limited modifications. Little, if any, natural reproduction takes place in the river for several reasons. primarily, the temperature of the river's water in the summer is too warm for salmon fry to survive and the river also lacks an adequate gravel base for egg incubation. Thus, late in the fall, the Division of Marine Fisheries captures a sufficient number of returning adults at the dam on the Indian Head River in Pembroke. Eggs are stripped and milt is taken to fertilize the ripened eggs.

After hatching, usually in December or January, the Salmon are kept at the hatchery for over a year until they have grown to be five inches long, then they are liberated in the North River. During the months of April and May, Coho smolts can often be seen jumping in the river as they begin to swim to the sea.

When next observed, most of the North River Coho Salmon are two years older, although a few male fish return to the river after only one year at sea. The three year old adults range in size from six to twelve pounds, but in recent years fish have been on the upside of the average. Fifteen pound fish are no longer rare.

Returning Salmon are often spotted at the mouth of the North River in Mass. Bay in late August crashing bait. These bright silver fish will often spend a number of weeks gorging themselves on the available bait fish, fueling up for their spawning runs. As they begin to move up the river towards their final spawning destination, their bodies begin to change colors until they are dark red. Another biological change easily noticed is the projection and hooking of the jaw. A loss of energy, especially as they enter the terminal end of their spawn, is also observed.

Coho are amazingly fast and very active during the early stages of their spawning run (August to September). They will often make long runs and then hold in deep pockets of water.

Be constantly ready for the jump of skyrocketing Coho. As they move up into the upper stretches of water, in late fall and early winter, they become harder to catch since they are no longer feeding and strike out of territorial instincts. Usually the fishing is over in late November, however last year the fishing remained strong into January. A new state record was actually set then.

Bill Smith is the owner of Adams Bait & Tackle on Route 139 in Pembroke. Adams Tackle is an official Salmon registration center and stocks the most complete line of Salmon tackle on the South Shore. Adams fishing hot line, after being out of order due to storm damage, is again operational. Call 826-8342 between 9 a.m. and 9 p.m. for up to date information.

FROM THE BOOKSHELF

When All You've Ever Wanted Isn't Enough By Harold Kushner

When Anne Morrow Lindbergh's classic Gift from the Sea was published years ago. Life magazine ran a story on people who felt an emptiness in their lives. An unforgettable picture showed a mid-west farm wife looking out her kitchen window, emptiness in her expression. "Is this all there is?" she was asking.

Like many people, she was living comfortably, her children grown, no major problems, and she felt empty. This is the feeling Rabbi Kushner addresses in this book. He bases the book on the Biblical book of Ecclesiastes, which someone describes as "full of quotations."

Its author tells how he tried everything, seeking happiness and didn't find it in money, success, fun. The Rabbi tells us what he thinks fills a life. "It isn't so much that we're afraid of dying, we are afraid of dying without having lived fully, without our lives making a difference in the world."

Kushner's phenomenally best selling When Bad Things Happen to Good People continues to comfort millions trying to reconcile suffering with religion.

Kushner, on WRKO am's Talking Religion program led me to Rabbi Lionel Blue's Bright Blue. Blue is a popular radio commentator in England. These brief "thoughts for the day" come from his talks and are frank, funny, completely unpolished and a delight to read. St. Martin's Press has published them in hard cover. Friends wanting to bring you a souvenir of their trip could pick up a paperback in England.

G.B. Stern

In my youth, a friend who reviewed books plucked Trumpet Voluntary by this author from her shelf and plunged me into a feast of plummy reading. This book, with Monogram, Benefits Forgot and Another Part of the Forest are autobiographical but with a difference. Stern was described by a journalist as "the homeliest woman you ever saw, but with such charm, you forget her looks when she begins to speak." She hadn't thought of herself as Helen of Troy, she said, but came to prefer this to "she has less charm than anyone you ever met, but you forget this directly you look at her."

Her books ramble, wander, are rich in delightful stories, a feast of reading. She also has novels that don't grip me so much, and a delight, The Ugly Dachshund, about Tono, who grows up among dachshunds feeling gauche and unloved, but sustained by occasional glimpses of Great Dog. Good for parents, too, who may be failing to instill confidence in their child.

Rosten

Leo Rosten is another favorite Jewish writer, prolific as anything. His Educator of Hyman Kaplan is good reading-aloud, a marvelous collection of stories of a young teacher's attempt to explain English to immigrants.

Lately Rosten has celebrated Yiddish, capturing the wonderful wisdom of a tried people. Like Kushner, like Jesus, he's fond of parables, letting a punchy story make the point. See The Joys of Yiddish and Hooray for Yiddish for a fund of marvelous stories.

Kemelman

A Jewish friend tells me she learned more religion from reading Kemelman's stories about the Rabbi as detective than she ever learned at home. Rabbi Small is a scholar, whose learning solves mysteries in a North Shore community, against a background of the usual congregational squabbles and rifts, in case you thought your church was the only one in need of harmony.

Others

James Michenor's The Source is a huge chunk of Jewish history, readable and absorbing.

That elevation called Masada has intrigued people for centuries. Two books about it can profitably be read together: Ernest Gann's The Antagonists, and Yaqui Yadim's (hope I'm spelling this correctly) Masada, an account of the archaelogical dig there.

PRAY TO ST. JUDE
Most holy apostle, St. Jude, faithful servant and friend of Jesus, the name or the traitor who delivered your beloved master into the hands of his enemies has caused you to be forgotten by many, but the church honors and invokes you universally, as the patron of hopeless cases, of things almost dispaired of. Pray for me, I am so helpless and alone. Make I implore youi of that particular privilege given to you to bring visible and speedy help where help is almost dispaired of. Come to my assistance in this great need that I may receive the consolation and help of heaven in all my necessities, tribulations and sufferings particularly (hear make your request) and that I may praise God with you and all the elect forever. I promise O blessed St. Jude to be ever mindful of this great favor, to always honor you as my special and powerful patron, and to gratefully encourage devotion to you Amen. D.T.

Top official intercedes, reviews Sweeney plan

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

A top official from the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) interceded this week in the quest by Walter Sweeney to rebuild a septic system at 21 Bow Street.

At the urging of State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, the deputy commissioner of the DEQE, Thomas McLaughlin, reviewed plans submitted by Sweeney to rebuild his family homestead on Bow Street at Jerusalem Road. After walking the property and reviewing the engineering plans submitted by Sweeney, the deputy commissioner concluded "there is no reason why a septic system cannot be built there." That is what he told the board of health at its Monday night meeting.

In late May, the health board determined the Sweeneys could not rebuild the septic system of the family home which was destroyed by fire in 1969. Three of the 13 variances requested by Sweeney were denied by the board, which in effect voided the entire plan.

McLaughlin, in his remarks to the board, stated he did not attend as an adversary to the board or as a state authority intending to override local rule.

"I indicated my role was a result of a long-standing request by Cohasset's state representative to resolve a problem of her constituent," he said this week. "We talked about the three variances denied the Sweeneys and reviewed them from the state's point of view."

As a result of Monday night's meeting, McLaughlin was asked to submit his remarks in writing to the board. He will meet later this month with Health Agent Joseph Godzik regarding those comments. A final version of his comments will be forwarded to the board members who will subsequently decide whether to reconsider their denial of the Sweeneys' plan.

"No real decision has been made yet on the applicant's request to reopen the hearing," Dr. Godzik explained. "Once Mr. McLaughlin's memo is forwarded to the board, they will decide what to

CHS 'Cruiser' dies in college dorm accident

Andrew Starmer, 18, a freshman at Green Mountain College, and a 1986 graduate of Cohasset High School, died from injuries suffered in a dormitory accident Sunday night. The cause of death is still unknown.

Andy, a member of the two CHS basketball championship teams, was completing his first week of classes at the Vermont college. Vermont medical authorities are conducting an autopsy to determine the cause of death. Andy had been placed on life support systems before he was declared dead Monday afternoon.

A funeral Mass will be celebrated at 11 a.m. Friday, Sept. 12 in St. Anthony's Church. There will be no visiting hours.

Andy came to Cohasset with his family three years ago. According to his coach, Eddie Minelli, Andy was the most unselfish, dedicated player he has ever coached.

"Andy was the best. He was the type of player every coach dreams of having on his team," he said.

Minelli, along with the staff and students at CHS, was distraught by the news of Andy's death. "He was a hell of a kid," Minnelli said, recalling how Andy faithfully attended every practice and training session through-

Cohasset bridge shines with new aluminium facelift

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The facelifts of two local bridges have put a new shiner on the old face of Cohasset.

Shiny aluminum railings are replacing the stone masonry fences which have lined the Old Mill Bridge on Border Street since 1924.

Part of a state project revamping that bridge and the Cunningham Bridge on Atlantic Avenue, the new look is economical and will meet state specifications.

Gene Young, the project's resident engineer talked about the Old Mill Bridge. "As far as aesthetics go, they are practically gone. It's just going to be a functional bridge."

He added, "Anything can be done if you've got the money, but the money from this fund was appropriated by the legislature; 352 cities and towns feed out of that same pocket and it can't all be spent in Cohasset."

The commonwealth agreed to a $163,000 contract for the job, but only $140,000 will be spent here.

Young explained, the monies in the contract were attached to different items; when it was discovered certain forcasted expenditures were unnecessary, the monies for those expenditures were placed in contingency by the state Department of Public Works for another project elsewhere.

Project manager James Skaves of J.M. Cashman Inc. commented, "I think when you're doing a project like this, it should look aesthetically good."

He said if the $23,000 which was turned back to the state were available for further improvements to Cohasset's bridges, "there should be more curbing fixed, more sidewalk replaced and more work done on the stone retaining walls."

According to Skaves, replacing the railings is the biggest part of the job.

The work crews, he said, will also patch holes about the bridge's steel skeleton, where concrete has deteriorated. The sidewalk will be rebuilt and

DEQE sets plan for harbor floats

A complicated legal case involving the town and a Parker Avenue resident may be drawing to a close.

After years of court battles, the town is now reviewing a decision handed down by the state regarding the proposed placement of floats in Bailey Creek by Parker Avenue resident William Figueiredo.

But the town, saying the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering has ignored a previous court injunction prohibiting the floats, has filed a contempt of court complaint against DEQE.

The DEQE proposed a plan whereby Figueiredo can install floats in front of his property. The state agency designed a plan which indicates the precise measurement, placement and number of floats.

Anticipating such a decision, the town filed a contempt of court complaint in August, saying the previous court injunction against Figueiredo was violated by this DEQE plan. A hearing on that complaint will be held in Norfolk County Probate Court, Sept. 24.

The original court case began in 1979 when a preliminary injunction was issued by the probate court, prohibiting Figueiredo from placing any moorings or floats in Cohasset Harbor. Harbormaster Harry Ritter determined the additional pri-

Underground storage permits

Any person who is an owner/occupant of a parcel of land, including commercial properties, which has an underground storage tank, is required to file an application with the board of health.

The board recently recieved a listing from the fire department of recorded property owners with under ground storage tanks. Those should be in contact with the board of health in order to comply with the newly adopted by-law.

Health Agent, Dr. Joseph Godzik, stated, "Prompt notification to the Board will prevent the necessity of further action to secure the essential documentation. Personnel at the office of the board of health look forward to the cooperation of everyone involved. This is just one aspect of the hazardous materials by-law enacted at the June special town meeting."

Additional information may be obtained by calling 383-1664. The offices of the Board of Health are located at 43 Elm Street, across from the fire and police station.

Medical services proclamation

In response to a request from the Cohasset Fire Department Emergency Medical Technicians, selectmen officially proclaimed the week of Sept. 21-27 Emergency Medical Services Week. The official designation will be held the same week as proclaimed by the governor.

Tax rate factor set

As recommended by the board of assessors, selectmen this week voted to continue tradition by setting a factor of one for residential property for tax rate purposes.

Assessor chairman Thomas Duggan explained a primary step in setting the new tax rate is establishing the residential factor. It is a complicated formula, he noted, which the state allows cities and towns in order to shift the tax burden from residential to commercial properties. In Cohasset, the tax burden has been shared equally by residential and commercial because less than ten percent of the property in town is used for commercial purposes.

If the residential factor is one percent, he said, all property will be assessed on an equal basis.

Selectman Cliff Mitman said the factor should remain the same as previous years. "Any tilting," he said, "and we run the risk of going against the small commercial businesses we do have. It would be in our best interest to have the same tax factor."

Selectmen voted unanimously to continue with the equal tax factor.

Duggan noted that a new tax rate for all properties in town should be prepared by the first of October. Barring another Hurricane Gloria, he said, the tax bills will be mailed to all businesses and residences by the first of that month.

Registrars request pay hike

Registrar's Clerk Frances Marks requested an increase in the pay scale for that position and the three registrars in the town clerk's office. In addition, Marks requested the personnel committee clarify the salary structure for the town's election clerks, election officers and the election warden.

In letters to personnel committee chairman Janet Daggett, Town Clerk Marks noted the registrars and the clerk of the registrars have been at the same pay scale for many years. The clerk is paid $329 and the three registrars are paid $326 annually. Marks requested the salaries be reviewed by the committee.

In addition, she requested the personnel committee clarify the current pay scale of the election officers, clerks and warden. The rates of the three positions do not conform to the minimum wage of $3.55 per hour.

Because the positions were not reviewed during the recent town personnel study by Caleb Marsh, Marks requested the committee look into the pay scales.

Little Harbor study

The state notified town officials late last month to proceed with a request for bids to complete a diagnostic study of the algae and pollution problem in Little Harbor.

Thomas McMahon, director the state Division of Water Pollution Control (DWPC), notified town officials that the town's agreement for a diagnostic/feasibility study of the area was properly executed and submitted. McMahon then ordered the town to proceed with a request for proposals which must be properly advertised. The request for proposals for the study must be reviewed and approved by the state.

The town is proceeding with a study after residents in the Little Harbor area complained about the odor and pollution problems caused by the algae. After meeting with residents on several occasions, selectmen requested the state's assistance in solving the longtime problem. The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering and the DWPC have assisted residents and town officials in the first step of providing a study of the problem.

Summer Street intersection

At a meeting several weeks ago, Summer Street resident Peter Wood explained to selectmen about the problem of speeding traffic at the intersection of Summer and Border Streets. At that corner, Summer Street bisects a short hill onto Border Street. Incorrectly assuming this is a short cut, Wood said drivers continually speed along that hill on which several homes are located.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle said he went to the intersection and witnessed cars speeding along that section of the road. "The cars actually seem to go faster there" he said. Selectman James Gallagher said he too had noticed the problem since Wood explained the situation to them.

Highway department surveyor Harold Litchfield, however, does not want speed bumps laid onto the street, Laugelle said, because it would prevent snow plowing. The selectmen suggested a one-way designation from Summer Street to Border Street on that small stretch of road.

After some discussion, the board tabled a decision on the matter until the neighbors submit their recommendations to selectmen on improving the roadway.

Tree trimming notice

The Eastern Edison Company is in the process of trimming trees to maintain the high tension wires throughout the town.

Asplundh Tree Company is doing the work. They will be in town approximately three to four months. If any residents have any questions regarding the work, please call 383-0228 for assistance from the Tree and Park Department, Peter G. Laugelle, Superintendent.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS IN PLANNED COMMUNITIES

If you are considering a house in a planned community, be sure you understand the ground rules set by the owners' association. These covenants can cover a wide range of subjects, including exterior paint jobs, where campers may be parked, where you can walk your dog, and what kinds of shrubs or flowers you may plant in your front yard.

These covenants have their attractions for many purchasers. You don't have to worry about your neighbors doing some types of things that you might find offensive. At the same time, however, they could cramp your style if you're an individualist and wouldn't appreciate possible community interference in plans for your home. If you're buying in a planned community, make your offer contingent on your seeing and approving any neighborhood rules and regulations. DEQE develops plan for harbor floats. . .

vate moorings along Bailey's Creek at Parker Avenue would take up valuable town-owned mooring space and reduce the navigation area in the harbor.

The case was brought to trial in October, 1983 in a two-day hearing. The judge, after viewing the harbor and mooring site, ruled in favor of the town and issued a permanent injunction against Figueiredo. According to this permanent court ruling, he was prohibited from placing any floats below the mean low water level at Bailey's Creek. That decision was made February 24, 1984.

Since that decision, the harbormaster reported that Figueiredo had placed floats below the mean water level. Rather than start a new contempt of court hearing, the harbormaster required Figueiredo to file application to legally place the floats into the area. The Parker Avenue resident responded with a plan which was reviewed and subsequently denied by the harbormaster. The town official ruled the floats, as indicated by the plan, were below the mean water level and were in violation of the permanent court injunction.

The harbormaster ruled that Figueiredo's floats were placed too far into the harbor and interfered with the navigation through the waterway. He ordered Figueiredo to remove the floats.

As allowed by law, the resident appealed the harbormaster's decision to the DEQE. He also filed a lawsuit in Suffolk Superior Court, enjoining the harbormaster from removing the floats.

The request for the injunction against the town was denied by the superior court judge, but a ten-day temporary restraining order was placed on the town. This prohibited the town from removing the floats while Figueiredo appealed the harbormaster's order to DEQE.

The town did not remove the floats, deciding to wait until the appeal was reviewed and a decision was issued by DEQE. The town's special counsel, Mark DeGiacomo, received a copy of the state agency's decision Friday, Sept. 5.

"It basically outlines the configuration of the floats allowed there and the specific length and positioning off his property," the attorney stated. "The plan also includes how the boats will be tied to the floats."

The town is dismayed, according to the attorney, because DEQE did not require Figueiredo to pull the floats back to below the mean water level. "It (DEQE's plan) ignores the permanent injunction previous issued by the court. DEQE has decided not to enforce the court's ruling," DeGiacomo said.

Anticipating such a decision by the state, the town filed a contempt of court complaint, stating that DEQE did not require that Figueiredo abide by the court's permanent injunction. "The executive branch of the government has, in effect, chosen to ignore the judicial branch of government," he explained.

"The harbormaster is only concerned with the mooring spaces the town will lose because of these floats placed out into the harbor," according to the town's special counsel.

In the meantime, selectmen are reviewing DEQE's plan submitted to them last week. "They are still reviewing the plan. The town has the right to appeal the decision. There are gives and takes in both directions. DEQE says he can have the floats, but the question remains, where can they go? There are features of the plan worth looking at, but the state says it will allow him to place the floats below the mean water level," the attorney stated.

Selectmen set to name new police sergeant soon

Selectmen are expected to name a new sergeant to the Cohasset Police Department on September 15. Board members interviewed four Civil Service candidates at their meeting Monday night.

Officers David Pomerico, Brian Noonan, Richard Abbadessa and Laurence Ainslie recently passed the Civil Service examination for the position of sergeant. There is currently a vacancy in the local department.

At the selectmen's meeting, each officer had approximately one-half hour to answer questions from selectmen and to make statements to the board.

Officer Pomerico is an 11-year veteran of the department. A Scituate resident, Pomerico talked about his four years of military experience and his two years in Vietnam. "You have to have authority, leadership and guidelines to go by," he said, explaining the function of a Cohasset police sergeant. "I don't want to be a tough guy, but I will expect certain things to be done."

Pomerico said his experience in the department has taught him to separate personal feelings from the job. Talking about the most unpleasant experience on the force, Pomerico said a vehicular accident on Beechwood Street which resulted in the death of two girls was "the worst situation" he had witnessed. The pleasant aspects of the job "are when you help someone and you get a little thank you. It's nice to know you're appreciated."he said.

He views the position as a liasion between the chief and the officers in the department. Administration is part of the responsibilities along with supervising the officers "and working together - by setting an example and to be willing to work hard with them."

A father of two, Pomerico told selectmen he wished the department could help educate the youth in town "to make them understand what a waste drugs are."

Officer Noonan is a native of Cohasset and joined the police department 13 years ago. In 1978 he was named the department's court prosecutor and is also assigned to desk duty during the day shift. He prepares court cases after an arrest is made, conducts pre-trial conferences and arraignments and also conducts some smaller trials not handled by the district attorney's office.

The sergeant on the force should be responsible for ensuring all rules and policies are adhered to by the officers he said. "Morale is very important,"he stated. "It is important the men underneath you respect you, and that they aren't doing something you wouldn't do yourself."

His career goal, according to Noonan, is to "look forward to being chief. But I'm taking it one step at a time. Right now, sergeant looks very good to me."

The officer said since his youth he has wanted to be a police officer. While employed at Stone and Webster, he decided to accept a large pay cut and accept a position on the Cohasset police force. Since his career began, Noonan has been interested in working with the community on problems relating to teens. In conjunction with Michael Gill, health education director for the Cohasset schools, Noonan has worked on several drug and alcohol programs.

In response to a question about the extended hours at Sandy Beach, Officer Noonan said there is not sufficient police supervision at the beach during evening hours because of a lack of manpower. Stationing an officer at the gate to inspect vehicles for alcohol is impossible , he said, with the current number of officers in the department. The shift coverage will improve, he noted, with the naming of an additional sergeant.

The officer said his most unpleasant experience on the force is his involvement during an accident where someone is injured or killed. "Death is something you don't forget,"the Navy veteran said. "But ninety percent of our job is trying to help people. Ten or fifteen percent is investing crimes or arrests."

The third candidate for the sergeant's position was Officer Richard Abbadessa. A 14-year veteran of the department, Abbadessa is a resident of the town.

Answering a question by selectmen about nighttime patrol of Sandy Beach, the officer said teens have to have a place to congregate, yet it is known that often youths go there to drink. Teens from other towns gather there too, he said, because of the recent extension of the hours at the beach. "I can relate to both sides" of the issue, he said, recalling his days as a youth in Cohasset.

A sergeant in the Cohasset department, he explained has direct supervision over the officers in the shift. "He is the go-between, between the chief and his men. The sergeant has to have the respect of his subordinates and he earns it by compassion, courtesy and helping individuals with problems," he said.

In response to a question from the board, the officer said if he couldn't get along with another officer,"I would have to go to the next senior officer. After repeated attempts are made to get along with the officer, I would have to go to the next senior officer - the chief- along with the officer and sit down in an informal meeting to see if our problems can be worked out."

Officer Abbadessa said his strength is his ability to deal with people. The owner of a local gas station for more than 20 years, he has learned to delegate authority and deal with the public. His weakness, he admitted, is "my wish that I was a step up in my education. It gives you more confidence - with more education. But if something interests me, I read about it. I do a lot of reading," he noted.

Noting "I have been through a lot in the department," Abbadessa recalled a house fire where three children perished. He also recalled the time he helped a young girl who was injured after falling off a car. Many years after the accident, he saw her again and she thanked him for his assistance.

His ambition to be a police chief is not realistic in a small department, he noted. "Right now," he said, "I am phasing out my business. So if the opportunity of chief ever arises, I might see about it."

The officer said advice given to him upon graduation from the police academy has remained true. "I was told to treat people with respect, dignity and compassion - adults and kids. I continue to do that," he noted.

Selectmen set to name new police sergeant soon

The final candidate Monday night was Officer Laurence Ainslie. Noting he had scored lowest of the four who passed the Civil Service exam, Ainslie admitted he was at the bottom of the lot. But he urged selectmen not only to consider test scores, but to keep in mind the character of the four candidates.

The 31 year-old Hanson resident has been a fulltime Cohasset police officer for four years.

Regarding the patrolling of Sandy Beach, the officer noted he had not found more problems as a result of the extension of the hours there. He noted it may be easier for police to know the teens are congregating in one area of town.

The responsibilities of a police sergeant, Ainslie told selectmen, include making decisions on the shift he is supervising, and setting down guidelines for his officers. "You are there to take responsibility for decisions," he said.

The officer said if there was a patrolman he could not get along with, he would try to seek a solution before taking any action.

The officer's only management experience, he said, has been on the few occasions he has been the senior officer on the shift. Prior to his employment in the department, he was a night shift supervisor for a Boston security company.

Ainslie said he raises and trains dogs in his home. He told selectmen he favors a leash law. "I like animals, but they should be in control. But it's hard to do without a facility,"he said, referring to the lack of an animal shelter in the area in which to house unlicensed, roaming canines.

Ainslie told selectmen he has experienced a lot of pleasant situations on the force, noting, "if a situation is out of control, I like to think I can make it a little better. That's a feeling of accomplishment. If you accomplish an arrest, that's not a real accomplishment. I'd rather alleviate the problem than arrest someone, unless there is a serious problem, he said.

As sergeant, Ainslie said he would want his officers to feel free to discuss any situation openly with him. Disciplinary actions would be handled on a one-to-one basis to determine the nature of the problem and the attitude of the officer involved.

Noting that he obtained the lowest test score and had the least seniority of the four officers vying for the position, Officer Ainslie asked that selectmen consider character in addition to the score of the Civil Service exam. Explaining he was not confident about being selected, the officer said, "I hope I have the opportunity to come up again."

Harmony Hill plans, Roberts on ice

Plans to construct three new condominium units at Harmony Hill on Beechwood Street are on hold. The property owner may be in jail.

Arthur J. Roberts, 38, of 584 Hatherly Road in Scituate, was arrested last week for allegedly defaulting on a $129,000 loan from a Boston bank. But when he was served a summons to appear in court, he ran from the two constables, jumped into his car and nearly drove into a Cohasset police officer who was standing in the town hall parking lot..

Roberts was scheduled to appear in Quincy District Court on a variety of charges stemming from the incident last Thursday evening, Sept.4. He was also arraigned in Hingham District Court on the charge he did not repay a loan from the First National Bank of Boston.

Roberts, a developer and principal of Victorian Trust, was to appear Sept. 4 before the local zoning board appeals. He was requesting approval to build three additional condominium units next to the Harmony Hill condominium development he owns on Beechwood Street.

But before his hearing which was scheduled for 8 p.m., two constables appeared to serve Roberts with a lock up summons. As Roberts was being led from the town hall auditorium to the side parking lot, he dashed to his car and sped off.

In his rush to leave the premises and avoid a stay at the local police station, he allegedly rammed into Officer Richard Yokum who was trying to flag him down. Yokum was injured in the incident and required treatment at the Beechwood Medical Center. He was out of work for the next three days with an injury to his arm and elbow.

Officer Brian Cogill pulled Roberts over in his car at the intersection of Beach Street and Highland Avenue.

Roberts, who never attended his hearing before the zoning board, was charged by Cohasset police with assaulting a police officer and a constable with a deadly weapon, assault and battery on a constable, driving to endanger, refusing to stop for a police officer, and operating a vehicle after revocation of his license.

In addition, Constable Thomas Kelly of Weymouth, who was injured when Roberts allegedly pushed him down the town hall stairs as he was running to his car, has charged Roberts with assault and battery. An arraigment on those charges was scheduled for this week.

The zoning board approved Roberts' plans two years ago to convert the abandoned Harmony Hill mansion into five condominium units. Although the board specified that a acre of land located next to the structure must remain vacant, Roberts recently informed the board he would substitute another acre behind the building for the side lot.

At the hearing, which was held despite Roberts' absence, neighbors of the development opposed the request. A South Main Street man noted that Roberts is having financial problems with the existing building and additional units would result in more financial dilemmas. He also complained that additional traffic from the development would harm the residential neighborhood.

Bridge repairs leave aesthetics in ruin

the road will be resurfaced.

Townspeople previously rejected the idea of adding chain-link fences to the guardrails to curb kids jumping into the water there.

Safety Officer Clifton Jones explained, "They could put up a $100,000 fence and I guarantee you, the kids'll cut through it; they'll make a hole."

He added, "The kids on the other bridge (Cunningham), I don't know how they got up under it, but there are metal support beams under it and they tie a rope around them and put a surf board under there.

"It looks like a ball," he said.

But Jones recalled a grim incident that took place there. "He was an engineer and had built a new home in Cohasset. One of the officers went by and told him, 'There's no swimming,' and he said, 'I'm just sitting on the bridge.'

"About a half-hour later, he was dead. He jumped off right after the cruiser left and got caught in the current. He was wept right out."

Jones said despite the dangers, kids continue to swim off the bridges.

Young said the new guardrails will be much more difficult to balance on top of, for prospective plungers. The rails at Old Mill Bridge will also be somewhat shorter than the present fences.

"There was an 80-year-old guy up here today," Jones said, "and we were talking about this bridge. He said 70 years ago, he was swimming off this bridge."

While the aluminum poles might be as tricky as the wobbly stone masonry for leapers, Young conceded the new design can't compare with the old aesthetics.

"You probably won't see a bridge rail design like that again," he said. "Not only does the design not meet the state specs, but the cost and time involved in building a stone masonry rail are prohibitive. The skilled hand labor is not available at today's prices."

Barbara Power of the Zoning Board of Appeals and of the Cohasset Garden Club said she will miss the familiar stone fences.

"One of the features that makes Cohasset unique is its views," she said. "We're very fortunate to have some interesting views from certain junctures, particularly from the roads.

"Our little stone bridges that we've had for so many years have been a very important part of that," she added.

"Now that we're having our bridges reconstructed," she said, "I hope they're going to be done with the idea of how important they are aesthetically.

"Unfortunately, we haven't had any hearings," she said, "and no real discussion in town about it; there doesn't seem to be a vehicle to do that. It's important to keep Cohasset from losing its character."

According to the project engineer, Cohasset's bridge work will be finished by September 19.

Top official intercedes, reviews Sweeney plan

do. No decision has been made yet about settling this matter without going to court. We would like the matter settled."

McLaughlin said he walked the property at 21 Bow Street and inspected the site. He then reviewed the septic system plans designed and submitted by Perkins Engineering.

Of the variances denied by the health board, McLaughlin said, "their reasons for denying the retaining wall as not affording enough protection because of the side slopes has little to do with environmental concerns. I don't see this issue as a public health matter."

The health board, in its June decision, ruled the retaining wall designed by the Sweeneys' engineer would not afford adequate environmental protection "in lieu of the slope requirements."

The board rejected a second variance request, stating there must be at least a four-foot depth of naturally occurring pervious soil to meet Title Five requirements. McLaughlin said his review of the site indicated the natural soil there was pervious. "They have done several perk tests that so indicate, and the engineer has gone a step further by saying he will put in better material," the deputy commissioner explained.

The third denial stated that a 75-foot setback from coastal wetlands to the system is required by the town. The Sweeney's proposed system is within 50 feet of the wetlands.

"The state standard is fifty feet," McLaughlin said. "The only time the water would come close to that retaining wall is during a 100-year storm. Not only would that septic system be under water, but so would the center of Cohasset."

Michael Bliss, chairman of the health board, requested McLaughlin submit his comments in writing to the board. "He said the board may be willing to consider my comments if I submitted them in writing. I will do that," McLaughlin said.

An engineer with 31 years experience, the DEQE deputy commissioner said he began his career designing septic systems. Some of his earliest efforts include sewerage systems in Cohasset homes. "I did a lot of work in Cohasset," McLaughlin recalled. "That was back in the days when you could buy property there for ten thousand dollars."

His assistance in this case, he said, was in behalf of a request made by Rep. Murray a year and a half ago. "I said I would help if I could, if the problem was solvable. We (DEQE) often try to help out in situations like this. That's our role. We value the local boards and respect their ability to make decisions. We're not trying to override their authority, but we try to assist them and the community in solving any problems," he said. "I walked this site and reviewed the engineering plans and I knew this problem could be solved."

Sweeney, a former professional football player in San Diego, has attempted for the past two years to rebuild his family's homestead. The structure, where he and his five brothers were raised, was destroyed by a fire in 1972.

Last year, the health board granted the Sweeneys' a manifest injustice which allows the owner to make application to rebuild a septic system abandoned more than three years ago.

Since that time, the Sweeneys have paid more than $15,000 in legal and engineering fees to seek approval to rebuild the system. The system currently proposed for the site will cost about $30,000 to rebuild.

The Sweeneys intend to build a two-bedroom, one bathroom home. The previous home, which had been on the site for more than 200 years, contained four bedrooms and two bathrooms.

Because the property is a non conforming lot, the Sweeneys are required to seek variances from the health board to rebuild the disposal system.

out his two seasons on the varsity squad.

"You know," he said, "at the beginning of last year's season I talked to Andy and told him I had a lot of good, younger players and he probably wouldn't get playing time in. But that didn't bother him. He understood, he just wanted to be a member of the team. He knew he wouldn't be a headline player. But that wasn't important to him. He wanted to part of the team. To Andy there was no "I" in the word T-E-A-M. He, more than any kid I've ever coached, understood the true meaning of team playing."

Comparing Andy to the "average, hard-working, good citizen," Minnelli said the popular youth never grumbled or complained about the lack of attention paid to him. "And just to show you how well liked he was, if there were a few minutes remaining in the game, the big boys, like Shultz and Bogarty, would make sure they threw the ball to Andy. It meant more to them to give Andy some shots than to score points themselves."

His concern was always for his team and the players, never for his own stardom, Minnelli said. "Andy was a person who never complained. Sharing in the glory of the championship meant everything to him. I admired him for his tenacity. I wish there were more kids in the world like Andy."

around town

☐ All of the signs are here . . . trees turning, school bus lights flashing, students laden down with books and, of course, the South Shore Music Circus Tent will be coming down any day. Seems as though we were just noticing these things in reverse . . . here's hoping for a wonderful Indian Summer (without any Glorias). Be sure to make the various athletic events part of your fall, your support will be greatly appreciated by all of the hard-working athletes.

☐ Speaking of sports, CHS's 1986 grad, Floyd Hardwick, was among the Varsity football players at the Boston University game on Saturday. Surely is a feather on his cap, and ours too. He had a grand cheering section, all of this year's team went to B.U. to see him play! What could be better than your former teammates there to cheer you on! Here's to a successful injury-free year for you, Floyd.

☐ Here's to a speedy recovery for Mary Fiori, who is a patient at South Shore Hospital. If she isn't already home as this goes to press, its a safe bet that she'll be there soon . . . after all, there's still a lot of hot September sun around, and she can give any sun-worshipper a run for their money. Enjoy it, Mary.

☐ Ozzie Ingram was spotted around town last week. Glad to report that he is home, and feeling much better after his recent surgery.

☐ Vivian McCormack is home too, and recuperating very nicely. Keep up the good work, and we all hope that you are feeling like your old self as you read this.

☐ Clark Chatterton's Fred Troy Scholarship was very successful, and he wishes to thank everyone who supported his efforts. You have enabled him to give another student help in his or her efforts to attend the college of his choice.

☐ Happy Anniversary to Carlton and Ruth Pratt, who celebrated the event on September 4. They have been married for 45 years . . .

☐ Happy belated birthday to Jeannine Pompeo, and happy soon-to-be birthday to Karen Pompeo. Two glamorous Sept. gals now, seems as though it was just yesterday they were toddling around the house...hoping your year is a wonderful one, girls.

☐ Had a call from Al Odermatt, who asked that we announce that the Red Cross has changed the date of the Cohasset Bloodmobile. It was supposed to be held on Sept. 16, but it has been changed to Sept. 23. Please note the change on your calendar, and don't forget to donate your pint!

Water Supt. Ben Curley did more than sit out Sunday's charity softball game against Scituate. He was a team leader (who helped lead his team to defeat). (Kathy Perlow)

☐ What an experience I had the other day . . . received a phone call from Connie Parker (head of the Historial Society for those of you that may not know), telling me about the Society's latest venture. You may remember that there was supposed to be a Victorian Day held on the Boston Common last June that was rained out. Well, they have rescheduled the event, to be held on Sept. 13 (this Saturday), with a rain date to be on Sept. 14. The Friends of the Public Garden are putting on tableaus of weddings, from 1865 to 1910, and all of the dresses belong to the Historical Society. Cohasset's tableau will be the finale, with the models on a swanboat. Two Cohasset girls, Jennifer Martin and Felicia Bartow will be among those in the finale, and what a grand experience it should be! Not only do they get to wear these beautfiul gowns, they get to dress at the Ritz, and carry flowers made by the Bunker Hill Florist! Connie was kind enough to invite me to "view" the dresses, I simply couldn't believe my eyes! Connie and two gals, Margy Erickson (who is in charge of running the tableaus) and Helen Hannon, were sorting through hundreds of old treasures trying to find clothing for all of the tableaus.

Since the Cohasset Historial Society is providing all of the clothes, you can imagine the chore they had ahead of them. Everything from bussels to hats to coats to gloves to dresses had to be found. All of these clothes came out of the museum that was downtown, as well as the attic and basement of the Historical House. Wish you could have seen those three ladies sorting through all the priceless clothing! Every single item is dated and marked and simply beautiful. Here's hoping that a home can be found for all of these treasures, so that everyone can see them.

Back to the Victorian Day though, and picture yourself on the Common, going back to 1865 and seeing all of the fashions of the time. The festivities begin at 1 p.m. Be sure to go and see our dresses on our girls as our ancestors saw them! And give Connie a pat on the back. She is a hard worker who is trying her best to preserve our history. Let everyone share in it!

Mrs. Courtney received her GRI (Graduate Realtors Institute) designation in 1985, and more recently completed the GRI Graduate Course. She also attended the Gallery of Homes National Convention at Hilton Head, South Carolina.

Courtney lives in Cohasset where she is a member of the Board of Trustees of One Hundred Pond Street, the town's first cluster-zoned condominium complex.

No labor counsel on negotiations

Selectmen decided Monday night they will not have labor counsel present, unless necessary, during the personnel committee's negotiations with the firefighters' union.

Selectman Cliff Mitman said it is unnecessary to have legal counsel present during every negotiating session. He also stated selectmen should not be directly involved in the contract talks. A former member of the personnel committee, Mitman said the selectmen's involvement during negotiations is cumbersome and sometimes bothersome. "I'd rather see a buffer between the union and selectmen — so we have a chance to stand aside," he said.

Selectman chairman Diane Sullivan noted the board received a letter from the firefighters union explaining their willingness to sit down with representatives of the personnel committee and selectmen without the presence of labor counsel for either side. They noted they are ready to begin contract negotiations.

"It is a fine letter," she said, "which was solicited voluntarily by the local union. They should be commended."

Sullivan said the personnel committee should be designated in each specific case, as the selectmen's bargaining unit. "One of our responsibilities," she said, "is to do contract negotiations, we should so designate them."

Selectman James Gallagher said he would like to be personally involved in the contract talks. But Witman argued such involvement can be unwieldly for the personnel committee.

Selectmen then designated the personnel committee as the bargaining unit during the negotiations with the firefighters. They will not have the services of labor counsel unless it is specifically requested. If counsel is declared necessary by the personnel committee, the union will be notified in advance.

Editorial

Who's helping who?

We've made our feelings known on this subject before. But when something is important enough, it deserves additional attention.

Town boards are elected to serve the public. Period. If it means going against family or neighbor to serve the greater good of the community, so be it. That's what it takes to run for public office.

Every decision made by a public official will not always be popular. You can't please all the people all the time.

But if it is not popular, at the very least each decision must be honest, fair and equal. That is a standard which must not be bent by anyone in any position.

And just as an elected official stands as a fair and equitable judge, so he must be willing to help those in need of his assistance. Someone coming before a municipal board for a variance or special permit must never be made to look foolish for his request. The town official must be courtesy, fair and helpful to all persons seeking his advice.

So why are there so many instances when residents of this town are made to feel inadequate, inferior and foolish in front of the officials they elect? How many times must we witness a town board dismissing a request with an attitude resembling misplaced haughtiness?

No one in this town, be it a new resident, native, merchant or entrepeneur, should be made to feel inadequate when requesting guidance from a local board.

It is certainly each board's duty to render a just decision. And if that means rejecting an application, then so be it. As long as the board has law to support its decision, the members stand on unshakable grounds.

And if the law leans to the other direction, board members are equally obliged to approve an application. If there is a way to assist the applicant, the board is required to make the resident aware of that alternative.

Such is the case of Walter and Nancy Sweeney. Hoping to rebuild a home lost in a fire many years ago, they long ago assumed they would be living within the walls of that family homestead. Their dreams have evolved into a two-year nightmare.

In order to comply with the board of health's requirements, the Sweeneys' have hired an engineer to devise a $30,000 septic system. This is for a two-bedroom, one bathroom home which will replace a 200 year-old four bedroom, two bathroom structure.

Each time they attend a meeting or appeal the board's decision, the cost of an engineer and attorney on their side means another $600 out of their pocket.

Not once has that board turned to the Sweeneys and explained the alternative disposal system designs available to them. It's just one rejection after another, without hope of a reprieve by this board.

We hope the Sweeneys won't have to follow a rising tradition by hauling Cohasset into court. We hope, with the state's involvement as a mediator, a solution can be created. We think it's possible, and now, probable.

For a system that never failed through generations of use, the health board has imposed impossible restrictions. Such decisions do not protect the public health. They cause the integrity of the board to diminish in the eyes of the community that elected them.

EDITORIAL — Cohasset: It has come to our attention from a variety of sources residents simply aren't treated with a trace of dignity when called in front of some town boards. While not applying to all town boards and commissions, some town officials treat applicants with downright disdain. They look upon all applicants or petitioners with suspicion and contempt. It's a rap for this new star

To the Editor:

"It's a rap! Lock it up! Continuity coordinator!" These sayings have become part of the everyday vocabularies of Cohasset residents as we have just experienced the making of Witches of Eastwick. For many of us and our families the summer of '86 will not be forgotten quickly. It will be a summer to remember, the fun and excitement of watching a major motion picture being filmed in our town.

I compliment Warner Brothers on its treatment of the residents and the merchants as the filming was in progress. The little inconveniences of movie making were quickly overcome as we had a chance to view first hand the making of Witches.

I think the young people of the community benefitted the most. For them the idea of a movie is the stars, the plot and the special effects. Now they have a deeper insight into how a movie is put together and the enormous talents of the production people. Such an opportunity has given them some idea of the professions and trades that all come together to create a successful movie.

I commend the town of Cohasset, the people of Warner Brothers, the cast of Witches and the staff of the Casting Company of Boston for all working together to make this filming successful. Sam Mercer, our closest link to Warner Brothers, kept everyone knowledgeable of what would be taking place in our town. He is to be commended on a job well done and on leaving the town of Cohasset with a good feeling toward movie making.

And as a background artist (commonly called an "extra") I had the unique experience to work right on the set and to see how a movie scene is created and then rehearsed and rehearsed. At least I didn't have any lines to remember, just where I was sitting, what I was wearing from day to day and how I looked.

But the most memorable moments of being an extra are of the people—the other extras, the production crew of Warner Bros. and the staff of the Casting Co.—that I met over the course of my movie career. Carol Larkin and her staff at the Casting Co. made each one of us as extras feel like an important part of the movie. Carol always took those few extra moments to answer questions or to just talk with us. From the first busy moments at the Deer Hill casting call to the last day of filming, the Casting Company never seemed to run low on its energy or in its expertise in working with the extras.

Our days of stardom have ended, our bus to Hollywood has returned to the St. Anthony's Church parking lot and Cohasset is back to Cohasset only to be Eastwick again when the movie is released.

So teachers when you want to get your students' attention say "lock it up" or mothers the next time someone asks "What do you do?" say "I'm a continuity coordinator" or coaches after the hard fought game is over tell your team "it's a rap!"

Thanks,
Robin ("extra") Suhrbier

LaRouche disavowed

To the Editor:

I am writing to let you know that the Democratic Primary Ballot for the United States House of Representatives in the 10th Congressional District will contain the names of two candidates, the incumbent, Gerry Studds, and Norman Livergood, who is associated with the National Democratic Policy Caucus—the party of Lyndon LaRouche.

As you know, the Massachusetts Democratic State Committee has disavowed any association with the LaRouche party. We have taken this position because we consider Mr. LaRouche's anti-Semitic, racist philosophies completely at odds with those of the Democratic Party.

We urge all Democratic and Independent voters to keep in mind Mr. Livergood's association with LaRouche when casting their votes in the September 16 Democratic Primary.

Sincerely
Chet Atkins
State Party Chair

Not is all bright for Metco's future

The first official school committee meeting of the new school year got off to a steady start Monday night.

In spite of some nail biting during the weekend over the threat of a strike by Metropolitan Council for Education Opportunity (METCO) bus drivers, that concern was short lived.

"We're very happy the strike was avoided," said Superintendent Stephen Hart. "All things considered, the year's gotten off to a very smooth start."

Metco was the main point of business for the committee this week. Metco coordinator Eileen Mills presented her plans to update the system, which allows some 3200 black students from Boston to attend public schools in 21 suburban communities.

The program began in Cohasset in 1968, with only nine students participating. "Now," Mills proudly informed the committee, "we have 47 current students, including 10 who are new to the program this year."

Despite its growth in Cohasset, however, Metco may not have a bright future. The program has stopped in Rockland and has been reduced in Hingham, leaving only three South Shore communities involved—Cohasset, Scituate and Braintree.

"The problem is the state's perception of Metco," Mills told the committee. "They don't think the South Shore is committed to the program."

Another problem is a recently passed piece of legislature that would allow the private sector to competitively bid for the services provided through Metco Central. The bill is not effective until September, 1987, but Mills warned committee members to keep a close watch on it along with the program.

Mills also expressed her concern over the lack of staff development at the high school. In regard to the Metco program Mills feared the black culture is subtly suppressed by both students and teachers in the school system.

"A student told me the other day in her social studies class they were discussing what slang was used for different minorities" Mills cited as her example. "What they would call an Asian or an Italian." After a nervous pause the white students told the teacher what they called blacks. "But the single black student was not given a chance to tell the teacher what they call whites," Mills said.

The program coordinator asked the committee to appoint a liaison to Metco who would help promote workshops for faculty and students to develop an awareness of everyone's cultural identity.

"We don't want the children to be passively bused in and out every day," Mills stated. "We want them to feel they're a part of the community."

The committee agreed to appoint such a liaison and to increase their efforts to hire minority representatives to the high school faculty.

"It's hard to convince people to commute down to the South Shore," committee member Diana Kornet explained. The committee intends to use more publicity to help them out.

Other business on the evening's agenda included the revision of the junior/senior high school tardiness policy. Principal Mary Ellen Gallagher advised the committee to drop the rule that tardy students can not participate in any school activities on the day that they are late, even after their detention has been served.

This, according to Gallagher, will keep students with after school activities such as sports or school clubs, from being punished twice for the one offense.

The committee voted to alter that policy.

The committee wrapped up the agenda by establishing the school lunch prices raising the students cost from $.75 to $.80 and the faculty's from $1.40 to $1.50. Milk will stay at $.20 with skim milk being made available at the same price.

The following appointments of extra day duty positions were approved; Gary Smith, junior varsity boy's soccer coach, Jim Sullivan, assistant football coach, and Steven Wilson, assistant girl's soccer coach.

Other approved appointments include: Mary Benbow, Occupational Therapist; Donald Thompson, Jr./Sr. High school Custodian; Joyce Salyards, baker, Kathleen Rhodes, part-time cafeteria worker, and Linda Curley, part-time Chapter 1 tutor, step 3.

Also approved were Jane Hamilton, activity aide at the Joseph Osgood School; Sarah Nicotra speech therapist, and Jane McGuiness, afterschool child-care program director.

The future agenda of the committee will contain a discussion of a system-wide release day program. The next school committee meeting will be held at the high school September 22.

FROM THE DIRECTOR—Autumn arrives this month in New England. Now is the time to enjoy and savor it because its season is brief. Everything seems more vivid in September. Cool rains and brisk autumn winds clear the air and sharpen our senses. The days are apple crisp, tangy, and vigorous . . . it's a perfect time for walking down a country lane where the trees are just beginning to scatter their summer momories. Come join us—our Senior Walking Club members are enjoying the season in a very active way. The groups walk every Tuesday-Friday mornings at 9 a.m. from the Senior Center. If you've thought about getting out, now is the time to join up—come down any day to register and meet the leaders—we are having a good time!

FOOD STAMPS FOR THE ELDERLY OR DISABLED—Food stamps, like cheese and butter distribution, are an important resource to low-income households. Food stamps make possible the ability to purchase nourishing foods of one's choice. Project Bread Hunger Hotline and the Department of Public Welfare want you to know about the Massachusetts Food Stamp Hotline, in operation 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. Call 1-800-645-8333.

Callers to the Hotline will be provided with detailed information on the food stamp program, including how and where to apply, verification requirements, and the rights of applicants. A pre-screening is conducted with each caller to determine eligiblity, and monitoring is conducted on each eligible household to find if they successfully applied for and received food stamps.

It is especially difficult for the elderly to access the food stamp program. Lack of mobility creates a problem in getting to the office to apply. Call the Senior Center for more information regarding the program.

Two-person art exhibit

"Inside Out", a two-person exhibit featuring still lifes by Jean Sawyer Railton and landscapes by Joseph McGurl, opens at the South Shore Art Center September 14.

An opening reception for the public to meet the artists will be Sunday, September 14 from 4 to 6 p.m. at the Center, 103 Ripley Road. Both artists have previously participated in exhibits at the Center.

Railton has exhibited in several shows at the Center including "Spring Dream" an All New England Juried Exhibit and at the Center's South Shore summer festival. She has also exhibited in the holiday show at the Francesca Anderson Gallery in Boston and at the New Visions Gallery in Milton. Her awards include the Rockland Trust Award, 1985 summer festival and Quincy Cooperative Bank Award, 1984 summer festival.

McGurl's work consists mainly of landscapes and out-of-door scenes executed directly on location. For him this contact with the subject and its surroundings enable him to assimilate the essence of the location into the composition.

The public is invited to view "Inside Out" through October 11, Mondays through Fridays from noon to 4 p.m. and Saturdays 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. For further information please call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

"Know Your Schools"

Soon each household in Cohasset will receive a copy of "Know Your Schools". This report summarizes the results of a survey of the Cohasset School System conducted by a committee of the Cohasset League of Women Voters during the 1985-86 school year.

Striking a perfect pose, these fourth graders look ready to hit the books. (L to R) Liz Corcoran, Jemilah Afshor and Caitlin O'Leary are prepared for their entrance into the Deer Hill School

The League prepared this report for the citizens of Cohasset in the hope that the information it contains will contribute to public interest and understanding of school objectives and needs. It is a factual and comprehensive view of the school system. The reader should understand that this presentation does not allow for judgement or evaluation by the League.

Much of the information for the study was provided by the superintendent of schools, the assistant superintendent, the school committee, the principals, various teachers and the personnel of the Massachusetts Department of Education. The League is deeply grateful to all these people and in particular to Mr. Eugene Crowell for extensive cooperation and assistance throughout the project.

In addition, the League would also like to thank Miki Berg and Donna Morgan who co-chaired this project; all those who generously contributed-as patrons.

Anyone interested in additional copies of the report or information about the project can contact Miki Berg at 383-1193. The League also hopes you will show your support by sending in a donation so that they may continue to serve you as best they can.

Historical museums complete 1986 season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Captain John Wilson House and Maritime Museum located at Cohasset Center will close for the season Tuesday, Sept. 30, following a successful summer season.

The Captain John Wilson Historical House, an 1810 Sea Captain's home built by housewright David Nichols, is completing its 50th year as a Historical Society building. Once the headquarters of the Society and the first museum established in Cohasset, the Wilson House contains an extensive collection of antique furniture, home furnishings, early kitchenware, children's toys, artworks and a large 19th century dollhouse all given to the Society from other old homes in the town.

Since the house itself retains many of its original architectural features, the ambience is early 19th century. The Maritime Museum, an 18th century ship chandlery long belonging to the seafaring Bates family of Cohasset, contains a unique collection of maritime artifact including models of sailing ships, relics of local shipwrecks, prints, documents and artworks relating to the town's "Age of Sail".

Built during the latter years of the 1700's by Samuel Bates as the chandlery and counting house for his fleet of fishing schooners, the museum building was moved from its original site at Cohasset Harbor when presented to the Society during the 1950's by Mrs. and Mrs. William Cox.

The second floor of the Maritime Museum contains, in addition to maritime exhibits, a general collection of diverse historical subjects from Cohasset's past. Included are housewright's tools, early school desks, Fire Department memorabilia, an old apothocary's shop, and stone tools of the early Amerindians unearthed at several campground sites in Cohasset.

The Cohasset Historical Society's Captain John Wilson Historical House and Maritme Museum are open each afternoon except Mondays from 1:30 to 4:30 through September 30. Admission is 75 cents per building for adults, 25 cents per building for children age 6 to 12 years.

Plan to visit the Cohasset Historical Society's two unique and fascinating museums on Elm Street at Cohasset Center. The Captain Wilson House and Maritime Museum together portray much of the preserved history of this old New England seacoast village.

South Shore Coalition sponsors day-long program on growth

The South Shore Coalition — a group of 10 area communities — is sponsoring the first annual day-long conference on growth issues affecting the South Shore on Saturday at Norwell High School.

The conference, entitled "Managing Growth and Change: a Perspective on the South Shore," will begin with registration at 8:45 a.m. It is cosponsored by the Metropolitan Area Planning Council.

One of the principal speakers will be Amy Anthony, executive secretary of the Executive Office of Communities and Development. Sen. William Golden, a founder of the coalition, and Joel Bard, an attorney and acting executive director of the MAPC, will give opening remarks.

Marshfield storyteller Jay O'Callahan will present his perspective of the South Shore, and Secretary Anthony will talk about the state's view of growth policies.

Marshfield Town Counsel Robert Marzelli is among the experts who will talk about how licensing authorities, such as selectmen, can use municipal leadership as a growth management tool.

Judge Robert Cauchon, former chairman of Marshfield's appeals board, will be among the guests discussing plan reviews, subdivision controls, special permits and site plan review process.

In addition, workshops on protecting wetlands through conservation commissions and how to develop groundwater protection plans are also featured. Another session is aimed at health boards who deal with Title V of the state health code and subdivision control laws.

An engineering consultant from Edwards and Kelcey, the firm which is doing the design work for Route 139 and is overseeing the town pier access road project, has also been invited to discuss the proposed Route 3 widening project and other major transportation projects planned for the South Shore.

In addition, a representative from Sverdrup, Parcel and Associates, the consulting firm overseeing the Old Colony Railroad restoration project is expected to attend.

Hanover Selectman Janet O'Brien who serves as executive coordinator of the North River pollution study and Dr. Reed Stewart, a Bridgewater professor who served on the Marshfield appeals board for several years, will discuss protecting the rivers and coastal areas of the towns.

Registration, which includes lunch, costs $8. For further information, call the coalition office at the Norwell town hall at 659-4909.

Since the coalition was formed a year ago, the 10 communities have begun to shape its own identity and address some very important regional concerns — the protection of ground water, the disposal of solid waste, mass transportation.

The coalition is comprised of representatives from 10 towns — Weymouth, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Norwell, Rockland and Scituate.

And to date, it has been a small success. "We've been getting the attention of state and local officials," Golden said during an interview last week with the Mariner editor's board.

The coalition first won a development grant from the Executive Office of Communities and Development and brought on board Jean Christensen of Marshfield as the coordinator. Scituate serves as the lead town through which funds are channeled.

Subsequently, the coalition wrote and obtained a $25,000 planning grant to develop a groundwater protection district for Marshfield.

However, said Christensen, the grant probably will be amended, as Marshfield, now faced with immediate problems of four contaminated wells, is seeking a comprehensive hydrogeological study to be completed by the state Department of Environmental Quality and Engineering.

Co-op Six holds benefit auction at Sons of Italy Hall

After a long primary campaign, Democratic candidates will come together Saturday night, Sept. 13, for a fundraising auction party for Co-op Six. The event will be held at the Marshfield Sons of Italy Hall, Main Street, Route 3A, beginning promptly at 7:30 p.m.

Gov. Michael Dukakis, Lt. Gov. candidates Evelyn Murphy and state Sen. Gerard D'Amico, Att. Gen. candidate James Shannon, Congressman Gerry Studds, state Sen. William Golden, Rep. Frank Hynes and other leading Democrats will put their political differences aside and take to the gavel to auction off a wide range of donated items. (Attorney general candidate JoAnn Shotwell has also been invited to participate, although she has not confirmed her attendance.)

Last year's auction party raised more than $5,000 for Co-op Six, a coalition of Democratic Town Committee members from Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth.

Co-op Six was established as an educational and fundraising organization for the Democratic party. The member towns share the funds raised. A highly active organization, the coalition sponsored cable TV debates between the Democratic candidates for lieutenant governor and attorney general this summer — debates that have been aired in 10 South Shore towns.

Last year's first annual auction party was a sell-out, and tickets for this year's events are going fast. Seating is limited with each town being allotted an equal share. It is strongly suggested that participants contact the ticket rep in their town immediately.

Cohasset loses in first bid against Scituate

Sunday couldn't have been nicer for a ballgame. It didn't matter so much that Cohasset was on the losing side. As recreation commission chairman Richard Barrow said, "The Jimmy Fund was the only real winner."

Sunday afternoon young and not-so-young town officials and employees took to the baseball diamond behind the Scituate police station to play the Town of Scituate in a charity softball game. In addition to aching muscles, the Cohasset players suffered wounded pride as they were defeated 9-8 by the Scituate team.

That's not a bad score when one considers ex-professional baseball player and Cy Young winner Jim Lonborg pitched for the Scituate team.

Cohasset raised about $500 through donations from local residents and businesses. Several Cohasset companies sponsored the 21 players who formed the Cohasset squad. The hat was passed during the game, which added $60 to the total. Combined with Scituate's contributions, about $1,700 was raised through the one game. All proceeds from the match will be given to the Jimmy Fund.

Cohasset lost the Sunday heartbreaker in the ninth inning with a three-run homer by Scituate. Starting pitcher for the Cohasset squad was Billy McAuliffe who was relieved now and then by health board chairman Dr. Michael Bliss.,

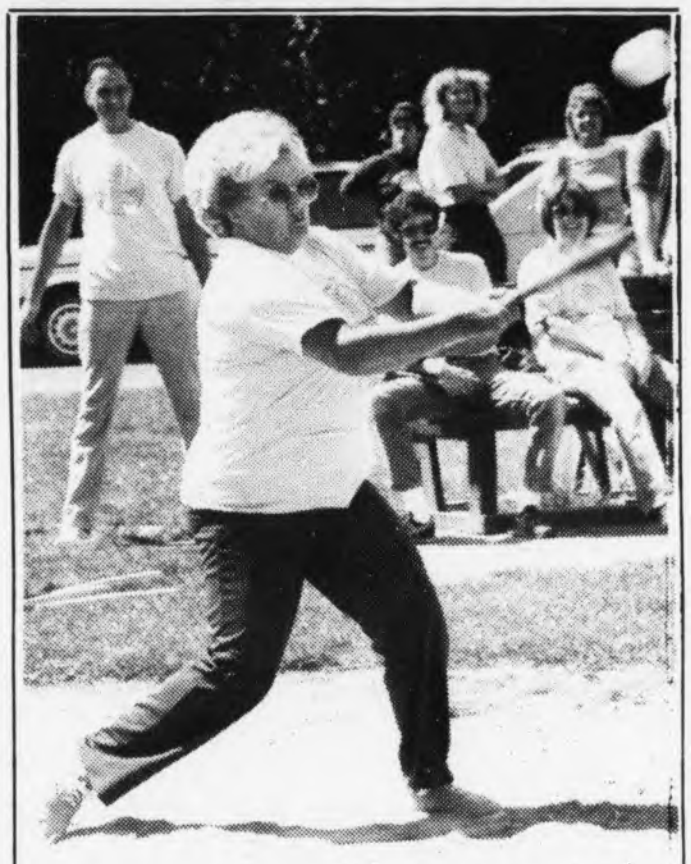
Scituate selectman Gerry Dwight, who challenged Cohasset and Hingham town officials to the charity match-up, was the starting pitcher for the Scituate team. It was also rumored that he traditionally fields ground ball with his nose.

Lonborg, who received an honorary town official designation specifically for the two-game season, relieved selectman Dwight throughout the game.

Every player on the squad was relieved every two or three innings. When asked how she fared during the game, selectman chairman Diane Sullivan said Monday, "I'm a little sore, but I'm okay. It was fun. I hit the ball, well, I mean I connected with the ball two times. But I was out both times. We're planning to do this again next year."

According to recreation director and impromptu softball coach Jack Worley, Scituate Selectman Dwight said he would like this to be the resurrgence of a round-robin charity softball league with Scituate, Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell and Hull. Worley said the Cohasset players were enthusiastic about starting such a league next summer.

"We did this before when Dwight was selectman in 1980, but it stopped. Now he wants to get a league together with all the proceeds going to the Jimmy Fund. There's interest here, so we said yes. It was a lot of laughs," Worley said.



Selectman chairman Diane Sullivan takes a mighty swing . . . and connects. Unfortunately, it was not a hit, but she had a great time, in spite of her batting average.

Among the highlights of Sunday's game was an amazing display of gymnastics by Cohasset second baseman Tony Fasciano. The local "hat lady," health board clerk Carol Oteri, wore a very special fedora for the occasion. "I don't know what you'd call it, but it was big with a feather in the brim. It was something else," Barrow and Worley proclaimed. And Cohasset's coach bravely participated in the event despite cyatica which flared up Monday morning.

"It was great fun," the coach laughed, thinking about his team's antics the previous day. "And we did it for a great cause."

The Cohasset roster for the Jimmy Fund game included: Dick Barrow, Carol Oteri, Billy McAuliffe, Joe Godzik, Charlie Stover, Tony Fasciano, Richard Yokum, Jim Gallagher, John Litchfield, Janet Trask, Mark Trask, A.J. Antoine, Paul Laugelle, Chartis Langmaid, Diane Sullivan, Billy Enos, Rocco Laugelle, Arne Gjesteby, Mike Spirito, Ken Ekberg, Michael Bliss, Jack Worley and Ben Curley.

As required by the game regulations, the total team age was more than 400 years for each inning. The average age of the Cohasset players was 46 years.

Date set for fall meeting

The fall membership meeting for the PSO (Parent School Organization) will take place at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 30 in the Cohasset High School new study hall.

The PSO executive board, headed by President Claudia Story, invites all parents of school-age children to meet school administrators, teachers, members of the school committee, and parents new to the school system.

The program will include an orientation to our school system, and the activities of the PSO. This promises to be an informative and enjoyable evening for all. Refreshments will be served.

"Alice In Wonderland" will be presented in performance by the Club in late November. This production is a stage adaptation of the classic tale written by Lewis Carroll. The script is by Eva Le Gallienne and her collaborator Florida Friebus. Directing "Alice In Wonderland" will be Ellen Kelly.

In this version of the well-known Lewis Carroll fantasy the author's wonderous and delightful characters come alive on stage, providing roles in the play for numerous actors and actresses of diverse ages and talents. Included, of course, are such wonderous personages as the White Rabbit, the Duchess, the Cheshire Cat, the Mad Hatter, the March Hare, the Cook, White and Red Queens, the White Knight, Humpty Dumpty, the Mock Turtle, Tweedledum and Tweedledee, the Dormouse, the Caterpillar, and of course Alice herself. The Director also states there will be room for assorted mice, lobsters, birds and the like, so the cast of "Alice In Wonderland" will be quite large. In this adaptation by the eminent actress and director Eva Le Gallienne, "Alice In Wonderland" is a play designed for all ages, children and adults alike.

The director, Ellen Kelly, is a teacher of dramatics for children at the South Shore Conservatory, and has directed for the Dramatic Club "Scenes From American Life" and "Scapino". Of the stage adaptation itself, Eva Le Galliene once wrote, "This production is not designed primarily for children ... the "adventures" part of the book is, of course, fascinating to children ... but it seems to me that a stage presentation of "Alice", in order to be faithful to the book, must appeal equally ... though for different reasons ... to both children and adults."

If you would like to try out for one or another of Lewis Carroll's delightful "Alice In Wonderland" characters, plan to attend the forthcoming Dramatic Club Town Hall tryouts.

The Center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset is offering a full schedule of courses for young artists in the towns of Scituate, Norwell, Hingham and Hull as well as at the Cohasset location. The fall semester begins at the Center September 22. Advanced registration is required for all courses and workshops offered. Nancy Connolly and Pat Michaelson will teach a Sculpture course for ages nine to fourteen. The first course will be offered in Hingham at the Hingham Community Center on Mondays starting September 22 and will be taught by Connolly. Other times later in the semester will be offered in Norwell and Cohasset. Students will work with clay masks, plaster reliefs and wire sculpting. Course times will be 4 to 5:30 p.m.

Cohasset Worship . . .

First Parish

Parish picnic—An old-fashioned picnic will be held Sunday, September 14 immediately following our Service of Worship in the field between the Martins' and the Ellises'. Hot dogs and hamburgers and beverages will be for sale along with cotton candy and popcorn. There will be games and the chance to extend greetings to one another as we begin the church year.

Parish news—Pauline Trueblood is at Norwell Knoll-just 15 minutes from Cohasset. She is able to leave for any number of hours during the day, can go out to lunch or to your house for a visit or whatever. Winslow and Kathy Trueblood feel she is better off near Cohasset rather than being in a nursing home in Seattle with only themselves to visit. Pauline appreciates keeping in touch with her friends at the First Parish.

Parish personnels—The church notes with sadness the death of Robert W. Porter, Ph.D., 41, of Ukiah, CA., who was drowned in a kayaking accident on King's River, King's Canyon National Park in California, August 10. He was the son of Richard Porter of Wollaston and Helen Porter of Marshfield, and brother of Katherine Porter of San Francisco, all long-time residents of Cohasset. A beautiful outdoor memorial service was held for Bob on August 16 at a camp ground at the Tuilomne River, near Yosemite National Park, where more than a hundred Californian friends gathered in celebration of his life. Bob was a biochemist and did cancer research at the University of Oregon, and was most recently a wine maker in Mendocino County in CA., where he won distinction and prizes for his wines. He was an avid lover of nature and an expert kayaker and skier, also an enthusiast of classical music.

Senior Choir—For those of you who asked for voice coaching, it will be available at the Meeting House at 7:45 p.m. on choir nights for a complete warmup and extra help. All others come at 8 p.m. sharp and dive into the new year!

The Parish Committee has decided to appoint a Music and Worship Committee, so there are a lot of spaces in the schedule to be filled with their suggestions.

Religious education news—The church school year begins in just two weeks! There is still lots to do in the next few weeks. The comments regarding the program have been helpful. If anyone has any questions about this year's program, please call Jane at home at 545-6394 or please return your pre-registration forms.

Community—The Cohasset Community Center is beginning it's 1986-1987 season with an open house Sunday, September 14 from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. All are welcome to visit the new Senior Center and the newly refinished bowling alley, to meet our Nursery School Director, view the architectural plans for addition and to enjoy pastry and coffee with the Community Center Board members.

Baptist Church Service

Sunday school will be held in the Town Hall, Sunday Service is at 9:30 a.m.

The Thursday night Bible Study is at 7:30 p.m. in the Lilac House on South Main St.

Second Congregational Church

Christian Education—The church welcomes the addition of Gail Whitehouse to the staff. Gail has agreed to take on the duties of church school superintendent. With teaching in her background, she brings excellent credentials to the job. The church's job is to support and respond to her leadership.

Church school—Registration for Sunday School will be held Sunday, September 14, in Bates Hall immediately after church. Your teachers are anxious to see you!

Thank you—No simple "thank you" can express the appreciation the church feels for the work that Marsha Silvia has done as church school superintendent. Marsha put body and soul into her efforts and got so excited she now wants to teach fulltime! God bless you, Marsha, on your new venture.

Chicken barbecue—Save the date of Sunday, September 14, for our annual chicken barbecue at Government Island. The cost will be $3 for adults—$2 for children. Call Connie Parker to reserve your tickets at 383-0773.

In the family—Glad to hear Vivian McCormack is home and recuperating, and that Ozzie Ingram will be home sometime this week. Happy Anniversary to Helen and Al Livingston who celebrated their 37th anniversary on September 2. In the midst of their travels, we hope they pause long enough in Cohasset to receive our best wishes! Ruth and Carlton Pratt will celebrate their 45th anniversary September 4. Congratulations and best wishes from all!!

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Uncensored warm-up

Something you didn't know about Dapper

By David A. Mittell, Jr.
Special to the Mariner

Although this column does not presently run in Suffolk County, the politicians of the capital city remain for the suburbs what the Red Sox are to New England: a show nearly everyone follows. Moreover, any time a reporter obtains previously unpublished information about a major political figure, he has a duty to use the forum available to him to make the information known.

In this instance, I have received documented confirmation from two highly responsible and reliable sources that Boston City Councillor and candidate for Sheriff of Suffolk County Albert L. "Dapper" O'Neil has a history of involvement with an overtly racist organization. The full name of the organization is the "Council of Conservative Citizens, Inc." (and affiliated Citizens' Councils)." Its address is a post office box in Saint Louis, Missouri.

In its August, 1986 mailing to its membership, this organization published ringing words of endorsement—said in the mailing to be Dapper O'Neil's—along with the endorsement of former Georgia Gov. Lester Maddox and 17 other individuals.

To appreciate what sort of organization the "Council of Conservative Citizens . . . etc." is, it is necessary to understand that the extreme right in America, like the extreme left, frequently changes the names of its organizations and invents new fronts to serve its unchanging ends. The "Council of Conservative Citizens . . ." is a recent outgrowth, variation, or front (it's hard to be sure which) of the other part of its name: the "affiliated Citizens' Councils."

The Citizens' Councils, with which O'Neil was also involved in the 1970s, were founded in Louisiana around 1964. They arose when the Catholic Church in Louisiana declared that henceforth it would not prevent black priests from administering the sacraments to white parishioners, nor would it tolerate racial segregation in parochial schools.

The Citizens' Councils were formed by a small number of recalcitrant white Catholics in order to oppose these policies as well as racial integration generally. Their message was overtly bigoted and racist(". . . The Negro possesses a characteristic odor of the skin . . . few Negroes, even with college degrees, manage to pass civil service exams . . . miscenation has been a factor in the decline of . . . Egypt, Greece, Rome, India, and Portugal. . . .") But ironically, the formation of the Citizens' Councils was itself necessitated by bigotry: Catholics were unwelcome in the Ku Klux Klan. The Citizens' Councils, then, originated as an alternative to the Klan for racist "Catholics"—the quotation marks identify the oxymoron.

Councillor O'Neil's involvement with the Citizens' Councils dates to the days of the anti-busing movement in Boston. One cannot know who contacted whom; but it is know that in the 1970s O'Neil hosted Council members in Boston and traveled to Jackson, Mississippi to speak to a meeting of the Citizens' Councils of America—another slight variation of the organizational name, but no variation of the organization message.

The present "Council of Conservative Citizens, Inc. (and affiliated Citizens' Councils)" that boasts O'Neil's 1986 endorsement appears to be attempting to affiliate itself with legitimate conservatism as popularized by President Reagan. Some of its rhetoric could indeed be uttered by the President and in its publications it now tends to distance itself from overtly racist statements by publishing the most offensive of them either as quotations or as letters to the editor. In this way the racist message can be disseminated and the dissemination denied at the same time.

The Citizens' Councils, their fronts, their tactics, and their persistence in the 1980s would comprise a telling taking many times the space I have here. Here my purpose is to confront Councillor O'Neil as a public official and as a candidate for sheriff in a county that includes an historic capital city that seems to have genuinely begun to move beyond racial bigotry.

It seems to me that at the very least the Councillor owes us an explanation. Was the published claim of his 1986 endorsement fraudulent? Or was the Councillor duped into believing that the Citizens' Councils are legitimately conservative as opposed to being racist entities that exploit legitimate conservatism to other ends? Or is it O'Neil himself who exploits legitimate conservatism to other ends?

I suppose exculpatory scenaria are possible, for it is not uncommon for a public figure to find his name and reputation used by the unsavory. But I must report that documented evidence of the true nature of the "Council of Conservative Citizens, Inc. (and affiliated Citizens' Councils)" was awfully easy for me to obtain—a matter of two well-placed phone calls put ample documentation in hand. If the Councillor claims ignorance of the darker side of an organization that boasts his summer, 1986 endorsement, one must wonder why he never made the same two phone calls.

Secondly, I must report that insofar as I am aware, no other leader of Boston's 1970s anti-busing movement has ever had a connection with an organization that articulates racism as a matter of principle. It has been asserted that Councillor James Kelly, and in his time, State Rep. Ray Flynn, were motivated by racism. Others who know both men (I included) would doubt such an assertion. What is certain is that none of the other anti-busing leaders—not Kelly, not Flynn, not Hicks, not Palladino, not Langone—made the mistake of publicly associating with overtly racist organizations.

In that Councillor O'Neil stands alone. At the very least he ought to explain himself.

Footnotes: (1) I telephoned Councillor O'Neil's office last week to get his side of the story. As we went to press the calls had not been returned to my 24-hour answering machine. (2) I am indebted to Mr. Keith Pyle who played a crucial role in locating the first of my two sources.

Planning Board upset with Cohasset Diesel

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Planning Board Wednesday referred to Cohasset Diesel on Route 3A as "an abomination" and "an aesthetic eyesore"

In their first formal meeting with Cohasset's new building inspector, Don Robbins, the planners asked him to warn the proprietors their garage does not meet the board's requirements.

"What happened here," Chairwoman Christine Bassett explained, "this site plan was approved in 1982 provisionally by the Planning Board.

"The applicant, Stephen Ward, did not file for a building permit," she said, "because there was an issue that related to the Board of Health."

She explained, the builder didn't want to install a septic system for a toilet at the facility and the issue was eventually resolved with the installation of a chemical unit.

"He then came back to this board," she said, "and our initial response was that the site plan approval was good for one year."

She explained, the responsibility is then incumbent upon the applicant to at least apply for a building permit within that one year, "unless he can demonstrate that circumstances beyond his control prohibited filing.

"He demonstrated to this board that the issue relating to the chemical toilet was the prohibitive issue," she added.

"As part of the process," Bassett said, "the Planning Board signed off on the building permit and certain conditions were agreed upon."

She noted, "Those conditions were that there would be full screening on the Route 3A side of the building and that there would be a service apron in the area.

"There's no question in my mind," she said, "without even riding up there, that there is no screening."

"The only screening up there is a trailer truck," quipped board member Robert Sturdy. "I don't think that's what the Planning Board had in mind."

"No," Bassett agreed. "The purpose of that screening was to screen such equipment on the outside. He was also to place a bermed, concrete service apron satisfactory to the building inspector there."

Robbins told the board, "There is an apron there, but there's no berm. By apron, I mean it's just a concrete slab just outside the building.

"The whole area there was supposed to be made of sand," he added, "with an appropriate catch basin with a grease and oil trap."

"I think what we want to talk about here," Bassett said, "is the fact that he agreed to do these things and we agreed to sign off on a building permit that allowed him to build his building, and he simply has not complied with what he has agreed to."

The board pondered the dangers associated with keeping heavy machinery just over a hill from the town's water supply at Lily Pond.

Bassett explained, "We're concerned with this area's serious potential drainage given the type of business he's running there; that's the primary concern.

"But the screening... We allowed him to put up essentially an abomination of a building because it met his needs," she added.

"Aesthetically, it's a disaster and we felt that if he screened it, it would accomplish the purpose for putting it up, yet it would not be the aesthetic eyesore on Route 3A that we're attempting to improve."

Bassett explained, the board has asked applicants to submit detailed landscaping plans and has asked whether particular shrubs should be replaced or moved.

"I think in this instance," she said, "because this agreement has not been adhered to in any way, shape or form, it's a most blatant ignoring of a promise that was made to the board."

She added, "Don (Robbins) has the ability to pull the occupancy permit if it's that blatant.

"I'm not suggesting that that be done," she said, "but I'm suggesting that he be reminded that he did agree to do certain things."

Politicus author previews state primary election

By David A. Mittell, Jr.

Continuing my uncensored run-down of the list of candidates in next week's state primaries...

State Treasurer

The Republican candidate is Joyce Hampers, the third former Democrat assured of a statewide Republican nomination this year. Hampers served under both Govs. Dukakis and King, and seems to suffer from Stockmanitis, a disease that causes the victim to have an uncontrollable urge to do an injury to his or her most recent employer. She served in the first Dukakis administration after which service she had little nice to say about the Duke. Then she went to work in Ed King's Revenue Department. During her tenure there her handling of an alleged scandal was so embarrassing to King that it is today considered the biggest single factor in his 1982 defeat by Dukakis. Now she is reborn a Republican and has little good to say about Democrats in general. I've never met her, but I must report that many who have describe her with a caninal term that, notwithstanding the title of this column, cannot be printed.

The characteristics implicit in the unprintable anthropomorphic may be what it takes to defeat the Democratic candidate Bob Crane, a smoothie who runs the state lottery, dines with Bobby Orr, and reaps enormous taxpayer-financed publicity by publishing lists of lost and neglected bank accounts. Crane has been in office for 22 years, was once investigated by Ted Harrington (the current Republican nominee for attorney general), and has many times been rumored to be about to resign, be indicted, enter a monastery, marry Princess Margaret, buy the Red Sox—you name it there's been a rumor to that effect. Yet no one in all those years has laid a glove on Crane. Joyce Hampers, who has run an effective campaign, may be the caninal anthropomorphic to do so. More power to her if she can.

State Auditor

The Democratic candidates for auditor are State Rep. Joe DeNucci and Boston City Councillors Maura Hennigan and Charles Yancey. DeNucci is a high school-educated former boxer from Newton whose stature has grown enormously as he has gained political experience. He is one member of the leadership team of former Speaker Thomas McGee who is greatly admired by current Speaker George Keverian and his supporters.

Nevertheless, as a candidate for auditor he represents the Beacon Hill crowd which has united behind him. As auditor the chances of his embarrassing Gov. Dukakis or his own legislative friends would not be great. Yet as auditor it might be his duty to do so. That's why earlier this year the Beacon Hill crowd put great pressure on retiring Auditor John Finnegan to resign right away. Our leaders and our great liberals wanted DeNucci elected by the legislature before the electorate could have at him. The honorable Finnegan refused to play ball with them. In my view DeNucci could make an excellent governor some day, but would make a lousy auditor in 1987.

The class in this field is Hennigan; in fact with Ted Harrington and Mike Dukakis I believe she is the class of the entire field of statewide candidates. Daughter of one of Boston's finest political families, she represents a diverse city council district that at its extremes includes a few noisy Communists in Jamaica Plain and a few nasty racists in West Roxbury. In between the extremes is every imaginable human color and political stripe. By remaining cool, clear-headed, fair, and firm Hennigan somehow keeps all those people talking to each other.

More to the point she knows what an audit is, which has not been demonstrated by her Democratic rivals. Even more to the point she is a true independent. Her own natural Irish Catholic constituency tended to favor the politics of Gov. King. Yet in 1982 she stood on Centre St., West Roxbury with Mike Dukakis and gave him her endorsement. Yet as Democratic State Committeewoman she would not go along with purging King supporters from the Committee. Therefore the Dukakis people see her as not being a "team player." She isn't—it's the best qualification for auditor that there is.

Charles Yancey is a black Boston city councillor and a good human being. On certain economic and foreign policy issues he follows the same left-wing line as the better known Mel King. But he is really a moderate. When you consider that growing up black in Boston in the late 1950's Yancey was subject to the same influences as Malcolm X and Louis Farrakhan, and when you know Yancy the person as I do, you come to appreciate that he is a constructive, useful public figure.

However, Yancey is only in the race because the Beacon Hill crowd saw fit to keep him in it to be useful to DeNucci. At the nominating convention Yancey was about to fail to get enough votes to put him on the Primary ballot—from DeNucci's point of view an alarming scenario in which he would have had to face Hennigan one-on-one. At that point certain Marshfield delegates who apparently had already voted for DeNucci suddenly saw—it is said Sec. of Human Services Phil Johnston helped them to see—the importance of having a black on the ballot. The result of the little known Yancey's fell popularity in Marshfield is a three-way Primary with the Boston vote split two ways, and with DeNucci therefore the preponderant favorite. (More on this next week.)

The Republican candidates for auditor are Andrew Natsios and William Robinson. Natsios is a legislator and the Republican Party State Chairman. He is quite able, and might qualify as the party's next Leverett Saltonstall if his wisdom were the match of his intellect. As it is he has wasted his intellect and some of his political strength pursuing quarrels with both liberal and conservative Republicans. He has earned the enmity of Ray Shamie by refusing to step down as party chairman—an act that ought to have been a matter of course once he became a statewide candidate.

Nevertheless, he is a strong candidate for auditor. The aforesaid independence of Maura Hennigan is tempered and potentially compromised by her personal and party affiliations. Natsios, by contrast, has no conflict of interest whatever when he questions the propriety of the Democratic Party line as offered up by either the governor or the legislature.

Natsios' Republican opponent is William Robinson, the retiring Republican leader in the legislature. Robinson is a frequent foil of Martin Nolan's Globe editorial page—a station that recommends him. But as a candidate for state auditor he doesn't pass muster by comparison with either Hennigan or Natsios. Like Joe DeNucci he would make a better governor than auditor.

Secretary of State

The Republican candidate for Sec. of State is Deborah Cochran of Dedham, a former state representative and a somewhat doctrinaire conservative. Her candidacy ought to remind you that you, had you been willing and sufficiently bold, could have had the Republican nomination for Sec. of State.

The stronger candidate in this race is the Democrat, incumbent Sec. of State Michael Connolly. Connolly, a solid family man from Roslindale, has taken his lumps as a "space shot" due to some of the gimmicks he has used in the past in his quests for office. But as Sec. of State he has been solid, and in his quarrel with Boston Mayor Ray Flynn over the 1985 Boston census, he has been courageous.

On the census issue Connolly confronted a conflict between interest and duty. His interest as a Bostonian and as a potential candidate for governor was to cultivate his Boston constituency. His duty as Sec. of State was to evaluate the 1985 Boston census figures without prejudice. When Ray Flynn's Boston came up with numbers that inflated both Boston's electoral strength and its due share of state dispursements, Connolly went to court to challenge the numbers.

As the owner of a piece of property in the city, I am fully aware that three-quarters of the tenants the city claimed as resident in my dwelling in 1985 hadn't lived there since 1982—in fact two of the apartments haven't existed since 1983. It is therefore apparent to me that Connolly knows what he's suing about . . . and a man who is suing his own constituency on the basis of honor as he sees it is probably worth taking another chance on.

In conclusion, I must remind you that in a primary we only pick party nominees. If you are Republican you will vote in the Republican Primary; if you are Democratic you will vote in the Democratic Primary. If you are unenrolled in a party you may vote in either primary, an act that will automatically enroll you in the party whose ballot you take. But you may regain your unenrolled status by filling out a card as you exit the polls.

The reason to vote in a primary is that when you do, you get first choice. If you pass up the primary and vote only in the final election, you get second choice—you only get to choose between other people's first choices.

Correction: Due to my incompetent scrutiny of the Mariner office I erred in reporting last week that Maura Hennigan was the only statewide candidate to solicit us for an interview. In fact Deborah Cochran, Andrew Natsios, and Nicholas Nikitas also solicited us and were interviewed by my colleague Mike Berger.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

A local follower of Uncle Scrooge

Late this summer I was browsing through the local newstand. Among the comics of super-heroes and monsters I saw an old friend, Uncle Scrooge.

Uncle Scrooge McDuck, as I hope some of you will remember, was Donald Duck's uncle, the richest duck in the world and Duckburg's leading citizen. Throughout my childhood Scrooge enlisted Donald and the boys, Huey, Dewey and Louie, on countless adventures, mostly designed to increase the vast McDuck financial empire.

I bought the comic and a companion issue called "Walt Disney Comics and Stories," which also features duck adventures. A new company, Gladstone Comics, has purchased the rights to reprint the old stories, as well as to distribute those which had previously appeared only in Europe.

Since my collection of comics did not survive my childhood, I was eager to return to them. The first story told of a struggle between Scrooge and his old rival, the witch Magica DeSpell.

This time she tried to steal his financial acumen by stealing his lucky coin, "old number one," the first dime he ever earned. Eventually she was foiled, of course, with the help of Scrooge's nephews.

Reading the story as an adult made me realize why Scrooge had been so fascinating to me.

Scrooge believed his lucky coin helped him maintain his riches. He called it "my talisman." A youngster could grasp what a talisman is by reading the story, as well as see how foolish it is to project one's fate onto an external object.

Magica is an interesting character. While she and Scrooge are enemies, one suspects some affection and respect between them. And she is the only villain Scrooge truly fears.

The relationship between them is similar to that of King Arthur to his sister Morgana LeFey in the tales of the Round Table. Certainly Magica's name is derived from Morgana's.

Do I read too much into these stories? I think not, since Scrooge also gave me my first exposure to King Solomon's mines, the Philosopher's Stone, Valhalla and the Incas.

Scrooge, inside his Disney feathers, is an expansion of the Faust legend. Like the learned German professor, Scrooge is an old man discontent with his acquisitions, always seeking more.

He once replayed the Midas story and turned his nephews into gold. In another he found the mines sought by the conquistadors, which proved so rich that the price of gold fell to ten cents a ton.

While Scrooge finds what he seeks, it is often accompanied by irony. Seeking is exciting, he taught me, while finding can be disappointing.

He stirred my sense of philosophical adventure, his material seeking being a symbol for a spiritual quest, like the search for the Holy Grail.

Since the stories were often borrowed from mythology, they gave me an unexpected introduction to the study of symbolism in literature and religion.

This is why I hold Scrooge superior to other comics. Marvel and Adventure comics feature heroes from Superman to Howard the Duck. But their mythology is ersatz, with little in them that is translatable to real human history or experience.

With Scrooge's loyal followers now well into adulthood, his old comics bring high prices from dealers. There are also publications written by and for those who have made detailed analysis of the stories, as though they were examining the Dead Sea scrolls.

Some marxist writers have suggested the ducks were tools of capitalist propaganda, and were exported to developing countries for that reason. Scrooge was a capitalist, though his shameless lust for money was hardly a positive image of one. And while his adventures required an acceptance of colonialism, the natives in his stories are the equal of the ducks in skill, intelligence and folley.

Every generation needs some benevolent old person like Scrooge to retell the great stories of humanity. Alec Guinnes' character in "Star Wars" fulfilled this role, and the lessons he taught were a comic book equivalent of Zen Buddhism and Samurai philosophy, with a dash of Oedipal conflict.

"Raiders of the Lost Ark" was exciting not merely because of the action, but because the Ark being raided was the Ark of the Old Testament. Without knowing it, a lot of kids learned more about how the Israelites believed by watching that movie than they ever learned in Sunday school.

The sequel, about the Temple of Doom, was an inferior film because all it offered was action. The historical background was gone, replaced by Hollywood mythology.

I dislike those Masters of the Universe cartoons today because their stories and characters are so shallow. Someone ought to produce a Mighty Moses cartoon, or a "Trojan Wars" movie series.

True, it might seem blasphemous to sell little plastic burning bushes and Mount Sainais at Christmas. But wouldn't youngsters be better served by learning from antiquity?

Childhood imaginations are ripe for high adventure. No matter how non-violent the parents, every child will play games in which monsters are slain and enemies vanquished.

At that time of my life I met Uncle Scrooge, who introduced me to wonders far beyond the ordinary affairs of Duckburg.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

What a prince of a guy

"It isn't fair," the Dragon muttered. "For years now I've been inviting Prince Charles and his family to enjoy our hospitality, and when he finally comes to Massachusetts, you're the one who gets to meet him. It isn't fair.

"Not that I care," he added hastily. "After all, he puts his pants on one leg at a time just like everyone else."

"So he told me," I smiled sweetly.

He looked shocked. "You didn't ask him that!"

"Just kidding," I admitted. "Actually, we were all so busy at the luncheon the Governor gave for him that it's hard to really remember anything. Except, of course, for the parts that are indelibly engraved in my soul."

The Dragon frowned. "What would your grandparents from Galway say if they knew you were hobnobbing with the future King of England?"

"They'd probably send me to purgatory for 77 million years," I conceded. "And quite right, too. How come Skip left the room? Doesn't he want to hear about this?"

"He lost interest," the Dragon replied, "when he realized the Prince you were talking about wasn't some singer."

"But you might as well tell me. What is the Prince of Wales really like?"

I waved a hand airily. "Oh, about what you'd expect. He has very simple tastes — practically a vegetarian. Good at small talk. Circulates in a crowd chatting — it hardly seems right to say schmoozing when you're talking about royalty — smiling. Not really remarkable. Except, of course, for an indefinable aura that speaks of centuries of breeding and tradition. A graciousness and a charm. A compelling personality. A smile that will haunt my dreams forever. Other than that, nothing special."

"Get real," the Dragon told me. "For weeks you've talked about nothing but how much work this was making; the bomb-sniffing dogs that prowled your offices, the federal agents everywhere, the security badge you had to wear, the time-consuming preparation, the protocol you had to learn."

"The last part was kind of difficult," I admitted. "We were told that you never address the Prince, but you answer him if he speaks to you first. You call him 'Your Royal Highness' the first time you address him, then after that, it's 'Sir.' You never touch his body, though if he initiates a handshake you respond."

"And did you get to do any of that stuff?"

I nodded. "He came walking right toward me, and it was so crowded I couldn't run and hide anywhere. He extended his hand, and I was so conditioned to not touching him that I nearly stuck mine behind my back. But I made a quick recovery and followed through.

"Then I remembered that although Americans aren't required to curtsey, it's considered a nice touch. I couldn't remember how to curtsey, so I compromised. I genuflected. I hoped my grandmother's spirit would figure I was seeking Divine assistance in my hour of peril."

"Good move," he conceded. "Did HRH actually speak to you?"

"In unforgettable words. He said, 'Do you work here? What do you do?'

"I resisted the temptation to tell him I was the Offical State Genuflector, and I said, 'Blerb, blub, bleh. Your Royal Highness.'"

The Dragon sighed. "That's class. You could at least have asked him to free Ireland."

"I forgot," I said sheepishly. "And anyway, I don't think he can."

"Well," the Dragon asked, "do you think you gained anything from your contact with the Prince?"

"It was a broadening experience," I replied. "And in the Middle Ages people believed that the King's touch would cure you of scrofula. Maybe that will help."

"But he isn't the King yet," the Dragon pointed out.

"I don't have scrofula yet, either," I told him. "Maybe I'll get it about the same time he's crowned, and I'll be instantly cured. You never know."

"And you think of him as a real, live Prince Charming?"

"I didn't say that," I pointed out. "But it's just a lucky thing for you that the glass slipper didn't fit."

Dare Family Services - Zachary needs a home

Zachary is an athletic, sensitive and withdrawn seven and one-half year old white male. He is a lonely little boy with lots of needs and few friends. Zachary is on the outskirts of his family and peer group.

The adults in Zachary's life are preoccupied with their own lives and problems rather than Zachary's. Over the past year, he has lived with a variety of relatives in several different homes. In school and family life, Zachary is the child that blends into the background and is easily forgotten and ignored.

Zachary is a child with many strengths, interests and a variety of needs. He is a sad and sometimes stubborn little boy who loves to ride his bicycle, play catch, and enjoys many types of board and card games such as checkers and Uno. One can see in his play a positive and non-competitive attitude. His favorite toys are "musclemen" and "transformers." Zachary is also a very sensitive child in many ways. He needs help with the expression and acknowledgement of feelings. He is very sensitive to the touch and feel of particular objects and materials.

Similar to a younger child, Zachary will yell and throw crayons or toys when he becomes angry. Zachary is a star in school. He likes and performs well in his special education class. Soon Zachary will join his peers in a regular classroom.

It is time for Zachary to live with warm and nurturant adults who are able to provide the love and attention he craves and deserves. Zachary needs a stable and well-structured home where he can grow and make positive gains in the areas of self-image and self-confidence. It is clear that Zachary will require guidance on how to make new friends and encouragement to include himself in peer activities. Zachary will benefit from adults who will make him the focal point of their life and allow him the space to achieve at his own pace.

If you have room in your home and your heart for a little boy like Zachary, please call Donald Moskowitz of DARE Family Services at 628-3696. Professional training and support together with medical coverage and financial reimbursement are available.

Office for Children branch to be honored

The Massachusetts Office for Children will honor its citizen partners, the Councils for Children, at the first OFC Citizen Recognition Conference, Sept. 13, at Mount Wachusett Community College in Gardner, Massachusetts.

Governor Michael S. Dukakis will present the Councils with a certificate of recognition in appreciation of their dedication and advocacy on behalf of the Commonwealth's children during a luncheon ceremony. Human Services Secretary Philip W. Johnston of Marshfield and OFC Director Mary Kay Leonard will participate in the day's events, as well.

Councils for Children are forty-three locally based citizen advocate groups in the Commonwealth who serve children through the state's Office for Children. The 1,600 Council members educate the public about children's issues, evaluate children's needs and advocate for quality children's services.

The day long conference will offer a comprehensive overview of many issues facing children and families in Massachusetts. The morning program will include workshops on homeless families, teenage pregnancy, and child care. The afternoon agenda will examine strategies to combat these issues through such options as coalition building, legislative action, and advocacy.

A keynote presentation will be given by Pat Borgesan, from the Springfield Junior League, Massachusetts Association of Junior Leagues, on the Volunteer as an Advocate, at 10:30 a.m.

The information center will provide a display of resources on program and project development presented by the Councils for Children.

All sorts of recipe notes from 'Grandma's Laundry'

Padded shoulders, long, flowing skirts and sweaters that look six sizes too big aren't designed to make one look svelte. Comfortable and becoming, maybe, but the way fads come and go, it's best to be slim and trim, even under layers of clothing. Now when fruits and vegetables are still plentiful, Pat Fromberger suggests this sauce for dressing up plain veggies without heaping on the calories.

LOW FAT HERB SAUCE

2 tsp. margarine
2 tsp. ea. chopped chives, parsley
1/8 tsp. marjoram or thyme
1 T. all-purpose flour
1/4 tsp. salt
1 c. skim milk

Melt margarine in heavy sauce pan, add chives and parsley. Add marjoram or thyme to flour and blend into margarine, chives and parsley to make a smooth mixture. Add milk slowly to prevent lumping. Bring mixture to boil, stirring constantly. Reduce heat. Add salt and cook 1 minute longer, stirring constantly. Refrigerate. Makes 1 cup. 180 calories.

So much for dieting! After Labor Day I find myself gripped by the urge to reorganize. After hiding things in closets and tucking things out of sight in the scramble to enjoy our fleeting summer, fortunately the day arrives when I'm forced to start digging out.

Now, on a foggy clammy morning, I'm finding all sorts of notes I tucked away these past three months. "Grandma's Laundry" mentions Fels Naptha Soap, a strong-smelling yellowish bar that brings back memories to those of us "over 36 and holding." Washing clothes clean with an aftermath of an over-powering odor of disinfectant was not its only use, for stairs were scrubbed, bathrooms scoured and kitchen floors attacked.

Even when Grandpa bought one of those first washing machines kept in the cellar, Grandma worked almost as hard as she had done with a hand tub and washboard. A typical wash was sorted, with the first load for whites; another for dark colors, a third for heavily soiled clothes. It was impossible to wash any of Grandma's delicate things for fear they would be damaged and that meant yet another load — this one to be almost entirely by hand. Then came the ironing! Somehow she found time to prepare favorite meals such as

STUFFED PEPPERS

4 medium green peppers
1 pound ground beef
1/2 c. chopped onion
1 can tomato soup
1 c. cooked rice
1 tsp. Worcestershire
1/2 tsp. salt, dash pepper
2 slices mild cheese, cut in strips

Remove tops and seeds from peppers. Cook in boiling, salted water approximately 5 minutes. Drain. In skillet brown beef and cook onion until tender. Stir to separate meat. Pour off fat. Stir in 1 cup soup, rice and seasonings. Spoon meat mixture into peppers. Arrange in 1½ quart casserole. Bake at 375 for 25 minutes. Top with remaining soup and cheese. Bake 5 minutes more.

I also unearthed from my over-stuffed "Miscellaneous" file this recipe from an English cousin who wrote: "Here is a good winter soup. Don't overdo the curry — the taste should be bland. Six to eight servings."

CURRIED PARSNIP SOUP

1/3 stick of butter
1 medium parsnip
2/3 c. of chopped onion
1 clove garlic, crushed
1 T. flour
Rounded tsp. curry powder
2 pts. hot beef stock (or chicken stock)
1/4 pt. cream.

Snipped chives if available, or green onion tips for garnishing. Scrape and dice parsnip. Cook in butter melted in heavy pan, together with onion and garlic for 10 minutes with lid on pan. Should not brown. Add flour and curry powder, then gradually stir in hot beef stock. Simmer until parsnip is cooked. Add cream. Serve with croutons. ("Don't take any notice," — writes Phyll — if your family says they don't like parsnips. This soup is so bland, they'll never know.")

Welcoming in autumn's Indian Summer foliage days

By Joan Pinkham
Mariner Correspondent

Germany has an "Old Woman's Summer" and England has "All-hallow Summer" and in 1794, our mild autumn days were described in a manuscript as "Indian Summer." If it is preceded by an early hard frost, it can come in late September. Calm air, distant haze and cool nights combined with a tide of crimson and gold foliage make this a season to be enjoyed. The Indians did, so will we.

Rita Araphoff was bringing in her house plants last week, potting up three trays of streptocarpus, those trumpet-shaped flowers with frilled edges, that had summered on her front porch. Into her greenhouse they will go, to be brought out for a table display, or to decorate a window sill all winter long. Full sun and constant rains alternated to make her summer vegetable and flower gardens very luxuriant. "I have no complaints," she said of this summer's weather.

Since most potted plants are native to the tropics, cool nights and drying house heat are not to their liking. Now, before the oil burner is turned on, is just the time to bring them indoors, giving them time to acclimate to lower light levels, reduced air and humidity. However, your cactus plants require cool nights to set flower buds. So, leave your Christmas, Thanksgiving and Easter cacti outdoors in a sunny spot until the early part of October, but watch weather forecasts, for frost will kill them off. Other plants that can be left outdoors include the cool season pot plants such as camellias and azaleas.

Sylvia White, Scituate's lecturer and author on the subject of the preservation of plant materials, says now is the time of year to gather your flowers, weeds and leaves to dry. Pampas grass, the reed that grow in salt marshes, is still in the purple stage and is much prettier when it reaches the full-blown stage when it looks like a small feather duster. Sea Lavendar, also found on the marshes, is at the stage now when the delicate little flowers are at their peak and retain their color if sprayed with hair spray.

Hydrangeas make lovely wreaths, especially if you gather the pink, blue and white blossoms. Tansy is not at its best this year — rather dull from all the rain and, if you wait another month, Queen Anne's lace will dry out and Sylvia says she sprays the skeleton with white paint for Christmas decorating. You can learn much, much more by reading her book which is about to go into its fourth printing. Called "Money from Weeds," you might find copies at the Clift Rodgers Library in Marshfield Hills, or the Science Center in Norwell.

Be up with the birds and Beverly and Myron Litchfield on the 14th and you'll have a fun time on the South Shore Bird Club walk. All will gather at the Cohasset Stop and Shop at 8:30 a.m. When the Litchfields were vacationing in Bridgeton, ME last month, bluebirds were everywhere. They returned to their Norwell home to be greeted by birds of another feather — those noisy, pesky grackles roosting in the nearby woods and flocks gathering to devour the feeder seeds.

There's much to do around the garden, even in the fall. Window boxes that may look unsightly as the annuals are pulled out may be filled with twigs of ornamental fruits and grasses, plus a few sprigs of evergreens. Bittersweet and bayberry can be arranged in the soil in the box and stalks will freeze in place.

Our front lawns are still growing and in need of mowing at a time when the lawn mower has usually been put away for another season. Like the weeds, our rainy summer has encouarged lawns and shurbs to grow, so that every thing is quite lush, but when our lawns get sick, afflicted with various bugs and diseases, all the pink plastic flamingos, whirligig ducks and tubs of petunias can't outshine a velvety green lawn. When the leaves begin to fall, keep removing them from the lawn as they accumulate, for they are more difficult to rake when wet. Also, too many may damage the grass, especially under large shade trees.

Sadly, the fall is a-comin' in and as you pull up dead plants, purchase mums in bud to add color until the frost. Bare garden soil can use a little attention. Some plant rye grass. Some add mulch or kelp from the beach to enrich the soil. The average date of the first killing frost in this area is Sept. 30. However, with the weather we've been having, it could come any time. The season can be extended by using an old blanket or plastic drop to cover the vegetable patch. Anchored firmly, when the weatherman says "frost in the lowlands," you may be eating squash till the end of October.

Warren Harrington, Marshfield's conservation chairman, has been known to travel thousands of miles in his pursuit of birds to add to his life list. So it was amusing that a friendly little Carolina Wren should choose his Spring St. mailbox for a 12-day stay while raising four fledglings. These friendly, little reddish brown wrens are common to this area, but the mailman and neighbors had a first-hand look at the fledglings from the time they emerged from their egg to the day they left the nest.

The Tufts Library on Broad St. in Weymouth is the site of the season's opening meeting of the Weymouth Garden Club. Mrs. Gordon Lang, club president, says they all look forward to their speaker, Nan Turner Waldron, who will include slides taken at the Outermost House on the Cape. Tea will be served at 12:30 p.m. and Mrs. Lang says she heard Ms. Waldron's lecture this spring at the Abigail Adams House and looks forward to seeing the fabulous slides again.

Broadcaster talks about a presidential conference

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Some labeled the match-up "the Gipper meets the Nipper." Others only recalled how the Texan strike-out king trembled at meeting his political hero.

But for one man who heads the Secret Service, last week's luncheon at the White House was destiny fulfilled. For John Simpson who guards the president, his family and staff, it was not simply a luncheon with the Red Sox.

Simpson, a former Roxbury resident, has followed the Sox for years. And thus it was the meeting of a lifetime - an opportunity to finally match the face with the voice that had recreated all those pennant-chasing games from his youth.

Cohasset resident Ken Coleman laughed with embarassment at the retelling, but confessed that after their brief meeting, Simpson stated, "this is one of the biggest thrills of my life . . . to meet Ken Coleman."

"Now that's not my story," he insisted, still laughing at Simpson's incredulous remark. "I guess he's a real Red Sox fan."

Indeed, as all things must change, Coleman has been one of the few things about the Red Sox that has survived the switch of team owners, managers, and players.

And Coleman was one of the instigators of last week's luncheon at the White House.

The circumstances had been similar last year, he noted, when a friend, Tim Sanway of New Hampshire, helped arrange a White House luncheon. Tim's brother Terry is an assistant director of the Secret Service.

"My wife, Ellen and I and our daughter, Susan, who lives in Alexandria, Va., went to the luncheon. We couldn't get anyone else to go with us. We had a nice lunch with the Secret Service people and they took us on a tour of the building," Coleman explained, noting the president was particularly busy that day, demoting cabinet secretary Margaret Heckler.

"This year, Tim and his brother Terry arranged another luncheon while the Sox were in Baltimore," he continued. "I told Mike Greenwell (a rookie on the team) to ask some of the players if they would like to go with us. He got Roger (Clemens), Don Baylor, Joe Sambito and Al Nipper to join me, Ellen, Susan, Joe (Castiglione, Coleman's broadcasting partner), his wife, and the Red Sox traveling secretary Jack Rodgers and his wife. We didn't expect what happened."

As they were about to parttake of lunch in the White House, the president walked in. "We expected he might come in if he possibly could. But we were told he was busy with some officials from Brazil," Coleman recalled. But despite his schedule, the president, a hale and hearty sports fanatic, sat down for a few minutes with the league-leading BoSox.

"He started his career as a sports announcer," Coleman explained this week from his Cohasset home, settled in for a home stretch after a weekend battle in New York. "Many years ago, he announced the Chicago Cubs and White Sox games.

"Frankly, his aides almost had to drag him out of the room," the announcer said. "He was delightful and he didn't want to leave."

Two teachers share philosophies about their career

• A 17-year veteran

Frank Deakin has been a teacher since he first stepped through the doors of Deer Hill School in September, 1969.

A lot has changed since then. But Deakin has not. He's as enthusiastic about education and his profession as when he came here as a "rookie" 17 years ago.

Today, he is a fifth grade teacher. He politely asks vistors to sit in his "office." Sure enough, there's a little sign taped onto his desk at the front of the classroom, stating, "Mr. Deakin's office."

He proudly escorts visitors to the back of the room where once a week a student from the class will be highlighted in a sort of visual autobiography.

Mr. Deakin took the first turn. There are photgraphs taken as a schoolboy and in his earliest years of teaching. There is a questionnaire pinned to the bulletin board, probing the most sensitive questions which were duly answered by the teacher.

How old? 38 years. What's his favorite food? "Boiled lobster dipped in melted butter."

Deakin further explained, that when he once answered Toll House cookie dough, he was beseiged by well-meaning students who brought him dozens of cookies.

"Now that I put down lobster, I wonder . . . " he laughed.

One question asked what profession he would like to pursue in the future. "That's easy," he replied. "I want to be a travel guide."

The Scituate resident explained that he and his wife, a Scituate sixth grade teacher, love to travel. It is their expressed intention to retire from teaching at age 55 and begin a new career as travel guides.

• New to Cohasset

In a school system where staff seniority is supreme, there are few brand new teachers. Kim Sammons is one of the few.

Sammons is a 1984 graduate of Boston College where she majored in special needs. She is young and enthusiastic and pleased to be part of a respected teaching staff.

"When I was interviewed for the position of special needs teacher, I was told by a friend that Stephen Hart (superintendent) was wonderful. Cohasset is known as a great school system. So when I got the job, I accepted right away. It's been great so far," she said, commenting on the previous two weeks of classes.

Sammons teaches a class of four special needs boys. "They're terrific," she said this week, proudly displaying color photographs recently taken of her students. The boys spend most of each day with Sammons and her fulltime teaching assistant, Diane Perreira. ("She's wonderful," Sammons confided.) Other students and teachers may participate in various segments of their day, but for the most part, Sammons is with the students from 8:30 in the morning to the afternoon dismissal.

Her educational background at Boston College prepared Sammons for her career with mentally retarded or emotionally disturbed students. But she is uncertain what led her to a teaching career.

"When people ask me that, I tend to think it was during high school. As a school project, I had to work in a residential care facility in upstate New York," she explained. "The people there were physically involved, which means they had cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy, spina bifida or a brain injury. I guess it was the experience there that lead me into teaching in this specialized field."

She began B.C. with the intention of obtaining a teaching degree in special needs, and that is what she accomplished. "None of my friends back home went into teaching, and my family never insisted I be a teacher. It was just something I decided to do," she stated.

With degree in hand, Sammons taught last year at a private school in Braintree. She was named to the Cohasset post this summer, replacing Toni Jillson who is out on leave this year.

Now her favorite part of the day is when her students gain pleasure from learning a new skill or solving a problem. "When they learn things they've never learned before, they are so happy," she said. "And knowing they're going to have an easier time with life because I was around, that makes me happy."

Her four students are an obviously large reason she is happy with her career choice. Another is superintendent Hart whom she admires. "And the

Postal worker saves a friend

An alert mailman, accustomed to greeting a familiar face on his route, saved the life of an elderly man two weeks ago.

Richard Leach, a Cohasset postal worker, was walking his scheduled route on a Saturday afternoon. As he approached 349 North Main Street, he noticed one of his favorite customers was not in his usual resting spot.

Frank Migliaccio almost always sits out in the screened porch at the side of the one-family home. As Leach delivers the mail each day, Frank will wait to chat with the postal worker.

"We're really not supposed to stop and sit down while on the route," Leach explained. "But I like to talk for a moment with the people on my route. Sometimes, they really depend on that little conversation."

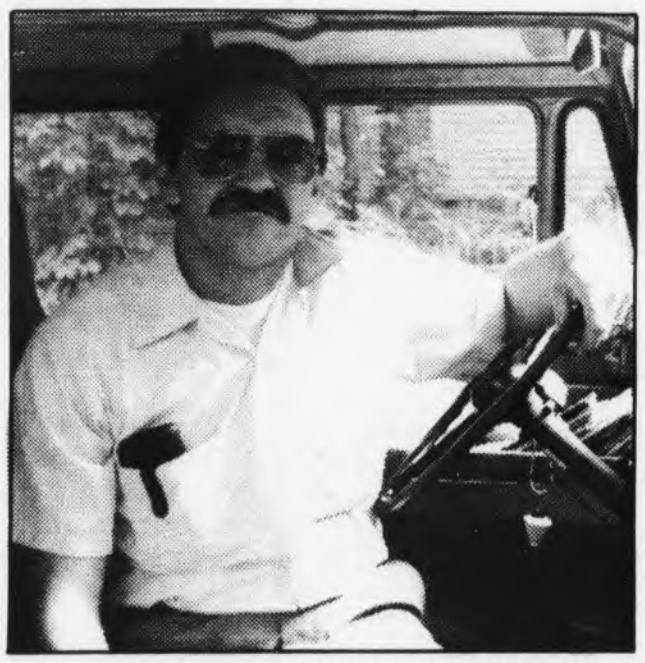
But this afternoon, Frank was not in the porch. And as Leach opened the sliding door to the porch, a thick, acrid smoke billowed out into the summer air.

"I hadn't been able to tell there was smoke in the porch. But once I opened the door, the smoke was all over the porch," he said.

Fearing that Frank was in the porch, Leach began screaming for the elderly man. "The smoke was pouring out. I went across the street and a man was getting out of his car. I told him to call the fire department," Leach stated.

The mailman then crossed back to the house and entered the smoky structure. He walked into the porch and opened a door into the livingroom, calling Frank by name.

"The dog was barking, so I thought everything would be okay. I banged on the door and yelled for him. Frank was sitting in the livingroom, watching television. He looked at me and asked, 'what's the matter?' He said something about wanting to finish watching his bowling on T.V. I took a hold of him and got him out of the house," Leach said.



Postal worker Richard Leach.

In the meantime as they exited the home, Leach noticed the heaviest smoke was pouring from one cushion on the porch sofa. "It's a vinyl sofa," he explained, "and apparently there was a lit cigar

The MBTA is proposing the restoration of commuter service to Boston on the existing Greenbush Line right-of-way. The MBTA is currently examining possible environmental impacts of the Project and is evaluating a combination of rail and/or bus alternatives to identify and develop the most appropriate project to meet the transportation needs of the South Shore and Southeastern Massachusetts.

The MBTA encourages attendance and participation from all Cohasset citizens.

If you have any questions, please contact Stephen Polechronis, Assistant Project Manager, MBTA, 722-3130, or Pam Wolfe, Public Involvement Coordinator, Sverdrup Corporation, 482-7880.

U.S. Service Academies

As a U.S. Representative, Gerry Studds (D-Mass), nominates students from the region to the nation's service academies.

In July, 15 students from southeastern Massachusetts began their studies at the nation's four academies: the Air Force, Naval, Military and Merchant Marine Academies.

Studds is currently accepting applications from 10th District high school students for nominations to United States service academies for the academic year 1987-88. The deadline for applying to his office for nominations to any of the four academies is Nov. 15, 1986.

The procedure for appointment to the Coast Guard Academy does not require a Congressional nomination and the academy's deadline for application is Dec. 15, 1986. Interested students should contact the academy directly by writing: U.S. Coast Guard Academy, New London, CT 06320.

For further information on any of the academies, students or their parents may call the nearest district office in Hyannis (771-0666), New Bedford (999-1251) or Hanover (826-3866).

Tri-town meeting in Hingham

Selectmen in Hingham, Cohasset and Hull have scheduled a meeting of the Tri-town committee Sept. 25 at 7:30 p.m. in the Hingham Town Hall.

During that meeting, the officials will review a status report relative to the Hull Sewer Commission's evaluation of the proposed Hingham-Cohasset connection. John Struzziery, chairman of the Hull Sewer Commission and Norman, Rogers, chief facility manager of the Hull sewer treatment plant, will attend the meeting.

The chairman of the Hingham and Cohasset sewer commissions will also attend to discuss mutual sewerage problems in the three neighboring communities.

Presidential honor

John Larkin Thompson, president of Blue Shield of Massachusetts, has been awarded President Reagan's Private Sector Initiatives Award for exemplary summer jobs for youth activities in 1985.

Thompson, of 268 Jerusalem Rd., was one of 98 honorees nationally who were cited for helping their efforts to find jobs in the private sector for needy youth. He was cited for helping 66 Boston-area teenagers find employment within Blue Cross and Blue Shield, the state's largest non-profit insurer.

President Ronald Reagon, Labor Secretary William Brock and the National Alliance of Business recognized the individuals, companies and community organizations with a Presidential Certificate.

Trailer problems in parking lot

Building inspector Donald Robbins informed the owner of Autohaus that use of a temporary trailer in the parking lot must not continue. Extended use of the trailer by the car dealership is allowable only through permission of the zoning board of appeals, he said. The appeals board previously granted Autohaus permission to use the trailer on a temporary basis.

In a letter to the town counsel, Autohaus owner Robert Guarino requested permission to allow the trailer until a lease arrangement can be worked out with Bergson's Ice Cream at 746 Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Guarino explained that the trailer is used to store goods for the car dealership. He requested an extension for the use of the trailer "to enable us to conduct a smooth transfer of items from the trailer to the leased facility," Guarino stated in a letter to Atty. Richard Henderson.

Robbins replied that any extension of the special permit must be granted by the zoning board of appeals. Any violation of the current permit issued by the appeals board will result in a $100 penalty fine. Each 24 hours that the permit is in violation constitutes a separate penalty, he added. The reply to Autohaus was written Sept. 12.

Selectmen appoint two sergeants to force

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

After heated debate, the Board of Selectmen promoted Cohasset patrolmen Brian Noonan and David Pomerico to the rank of sergeant.

Officers Richard Abadessa and Lawrence Ainslie were also in contention for the two open sergeant's spots, and their rejections did not come easily.

Chairwoman Diane Sullivan commented, "I wish we could appoint all four of them; it is a very difficult decision."

Selectmen Rocco Laugelle did not participate at the interviews last week because he thought there was a possibility he could be in conflict.

However, he opened discussion of the appointments, announcing he had checked with "the proper authorities," who said he was not in conflict because neither he nor his family stood to benefit financially from the appointments.

The arguments began as Laugelle offered to open nominations. Selectman James Gallagher demanded he be allowed to open nominations, since he started the interviews.

The other board members told him it made no difference who opened nominations, and acquiesced. Gallagher nominated Richard Abadessa and Sullivan seconded the motion "for the sake of discussion."

Gallagher said he was pleased each candidate passed the civil service test, which qualified them for the position.

"I'm very proud that Cohasset has four patrolmen who have passed it," he said.

"I've read their resumes twice," he added; "I took a walk in Whitney Woods for two hours Sunday and tried to figure out which is the best, and I can't.

"So," he explained, "the way I picked them was by senior officers. And the senior officer in this case is Richard Abadessa, my first choice."

Selectman Clifford Mitman challenged Gallagher's finding.

He contended, seniority "is probably starting at the wrong end" of reasons to choose a sergeant.

"I think if you took the best scores," Mitman said, "and note the fact that all of the candidates are competent, certainly the test is proxy for the knowledge of what it takes to be a sergeant."

Gallagher responded, "I think it would inspire the older policemen who take the test and pass it, to advance them in their careers. There are a lot of policemen who get on in age, and they really don't feel they have a chance against the younger fellows."

Of Abadessa he added, "I think an older fellow, who has shown good leadership since 1972, has a great record, and has been honored for bravery in one of the town's tragedies that I'll never forget.

"I think the man has done his job and done it very well," he said, "and I think he deserves to be sergeant."

Mitman allowed, "I'm certainly not implying he hasn't done his job; there is no reason to suspect that he hasn't. I acknowledge he does a good job.

"But," he countered, "I'd prefer as much as we can to recognize competence as it's measured by the test scores. We really have no other way to make the decision."

Gallagher disagreed, saying the test scores merely allowed the candidates the opportunity to apply for the positions.

"You read the resumes to find out what you've got in terms of talent, education and dedication to the town of Cohasset," he said.

Mitman reiterated, "If you're going to make the appointment on the basis of seniority, I think that's the wrong approach and if we can't make any other significant distinction, which I frankly think we can't, then I prefer to make a distinction on the basis of the test score, rather than length of time on the force."

The nomination of Richard Abadessa failed in a 1-3 vote, as Sullivan and Laugelle agreed with Mitman's determination.

Brian Noonan was promoted unanimously.

Next, Gallagher nominated David Pomerico, then voted against him.

Laugelle questioned the move, but Sullivan and Mitman agreed he could do it.

"I'm not sure why he would," Mitman added.

Pomerico's promotion passed, 3-1.

Finally, Gallagher said, "I'd like to nominate Lawrence Ainslie for sergeant to the town of Cohasset."

"You can't do that Jimmy," Laugelle said. "We've already appointed two."

"We've already filled the positions," Sullivan added. "Suppose it passed. There are no positions open."

The soccer scoring attack will be stressed this year

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Cohasset varsity soccer squad will have to battle hard to attain the heights it reached last season.

The team's new head coach, Dan Magner described the Skippers' 1986 scenario.

"We've lost eight starters from last year," he said, "so we're fairly young; we have only three seniors."

A contingent of 10 juniors, four sophmores and four freshman make up the balance of the team.

"The talent level of the young players is very high," Magner commented. "It's a strong passing team and they work very well together."

He added, "One thing we have to work on is finishing, scoring goals."

Cohasset opened the season with a 2-1 loss at Silver Lake.

"I thought we played well," Magner said. "I liked the passing and the communication between the players. But we have to work on our scoring; we had twice as many shots on goal, yet they ended up beating us."

He explained, "We were putting our shots wide of the net, or over the net when we were fairly open and had a good chance to score. We didn't take advantage of the opportunities we had."

In the Skippers' second contest, Todd Fitzpatrick netted two goals to lead Cohasset past Abington, 2-0.

"We started to make our chances count in that game," Magner said. "There was some improvement."

Along with Fitzpatrick, who is a junior this year, Magner said he expects juniors David Shultz and Scott Fitzsimmons to be standouts. And the team, will look to its captain, senior John Reidy for leadership.

The Skippers' new coach, Dan Magner graduated with a psychology degree from Eastern Nazarene College in Quincy in 1985.

He was a four-year starter on his own high school team at Xaverian Brothers and he also played four years at Eastern Nazarene College.

For a time, he played in the semi-pro LASA League.

Last year, Magner worked as the assistant soccer coach at Bridgewater State College; he also worked at a number of soccer camps in various locations through the summer.

When he's not coaching soccer at Cohasset High School, he works for the South Shore Soccer Supply Company.

"I'd like to get my masters," Magner said, "but I've got to pay some bills off first."

He said his long-term goal is to go into industrial psychology.

The Skippers' new skipper praised his predecessor's job preparing the lads for action. "I think John Anderson did a really good job; a lot of his stuff has carried over.

CHS Soccer player David Shultz is a familiar face on the high school practice fields.

"They're young," he noted. "And they're very enthusiastic because they're young; they're enthusiastic about every game. Even in practice, they do a lot of cheering amongst themselves, clapping and really encouraging each other."

As a coach, Magner said he expects his players to work hard all the time and to concentrate.

He laughed. "It's tough, because a lot of younger guys don't want to pay attention; they don't want to take the time to learn," he said.

"You have to be a teacher as well as a coach," he added. "Hopefully, the hard work ethic will carry over to their school work and to their lives in general.

"Being mentally alert and aware at all times is another thing that, hopefully will be passed on," he said.

Magner said the team's first goal this year, is to win the South Shore League small schools division.

"Our second goal is to qualify for the tournament, and the third and ultimate goal," he added, "is to win the state tournament.

"But we might be a year away from that," he conceded, "because there are so many young players."

Magner explained, "We're trying to build gradually; we're looking to build and build and hopefully start peaking from the middle to the end of the season.

"I think we have an excellent chance of making the state tournament."

No seaside building

A Bridgewater State College professor wants waterfront buildings phased out.

Reed Stewart PhD offered his proposal during last week's South Shore Coalition conference in Norwell.

Realizing his proposal would not be favorably accepted and most probably would not be adopted, Stewart nevertheless called for state and local legislation to affect building codes, zoning, financing, insurance and even public utility regulations. He wants to prevent additional building along the coast and to phase out existing uses that impair the defensive capacity of beach, dune, headland and marsh.

WHY YOU SHOULD CONSIDER THE DEFIANT BY VERMONT CASTINGS

There are practical reasons for buying a Defiant woodstove. And there are emotional reasons. The former deal with heat. The latter with warmth.

Load it with wood, strike a match and let it roar. This 60,000 BTU/hr. powerplant will heat an entire home. And with a long steady burn, you couldn't ask for a more practical heating alternative.

As for its warmth, the Defiant's classic lines and earthy black cast iron form bring a traditional hominess to any environment.

Interviews for patrolmen

They all laughed, except for Gallagher.

In other business, the board interviewed three candidates for an open patrolman's position at the Cohasset Police Department.

Vernon Hubbard, 30 of Church Street told the board he is looking for "a good, secure job" after years of on-again-off-again employment in the shipyards of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

He admitted he has no experience or education in the area of law enforcement, but said he worked security jobs while in the U. S. Navy.

Hubbard concluded, his ambition sets him apart. "In the shipyards I started out as a welder and became a supervisor. In a police department, there is also opportunity for advancement, and I would take advantage of every opportunity."

Patrick Plante, a Cohasset native impressed the board with his qualifications.

A graduate of the criminal justice program at Northeastern University, Plante is a member of the Coast Guard reserves, is a qualified marksman and was trained in finger printing.

He told the board his work at the traffic bureau at Braintree gave also gave him experience dealing with the courts.

Plante told the board he had to work with "undesirables" in his job with the South Shore Plaza Police Department.

He admitted, "I sometimes have problems getting along with co-workers and adjusting to different personalities."

Plante concluded, his level head and discretion have helped him handle emergencies in his job as a security supervisor at the Westin Hotel in Boston, where he has been confronted with an attempted suicide and three accidents.

William Oliver, a Cohasset lobsterman, told the board he wants the job as a patrolman "to keep the town the way it is, a clean environment to live in."

He pointed to his experience with Crown Security Services as a night-duty watchman at apartment complexes, and explained he plans to take courses in criminal justice.

"What disturbs you the most?" the board asked.

"Drugs," Oliver replied. "I don't like to see kids messing with drugs and messing up their potential. People should get high on life, and live cleanly."

The board expects to consider appointing a new patrolman at its next meeting, September 29.

Have termites been picnicing on the support beams in your basement? If you're trying to sell this type of handyman's special, read any purchase offer very carefully before signing.

Most standard contract forms have clauses describing the condition in which you must convey your home at settlement. If you've accepted a price that reflects the "needs work" condition of your home, you might want to insist on selling it "as is," removing any clauses that require the appliances and mechanical systems to be in working order. Teachers share some thoughts on their careers

"We won't open an agency or anything," he said. "But we'd like to take people on trips, do a lot of research on the lands where we travel."

Deakin added, "For both my wife and I, teaching has been a major part of our lives. Although we've met some really fine teachers in their 70's, we feel the job is so difficult mentally and physically we'd like to move onto something else at age 55. We know we've given our best to teaching. But it's like a baseball player, you want to leave your profession while you still feel you're doing a good job."

A graduate of the University of Maine in Farmington, Deakin considers that state home although he lived many years in Weymouth. His mother and father, and his wife's parents are teachers.

"I believe I'm the fourth generation of teachers in my family," he stated.

His interest in teaching began, Deakin assumed, from his childhood. "I always liked school," he said, noting that most of his life's experiences have been decided by and limited to the classroom. "I was the teacher in our family. My brother is a lieutenant colonel in the Army, my other brother works in the Civil Rights division of the Department of Education. I was the one who always liked school," he explained.

To this day, 17 years after he began his teaching career, Deakin has never referred to his profession as 'work.'

"When I go off in the morning, I say I'm leaving for school, not for work," he thought aloud.

Deer Hill has been special for him. The teachers who comprise the school staff are closely-knit and helpful.

Sixth grade instructor Joseph Becker was his "mentor."

"I was useless my first three years here," he said, laughing. "After that, I knew what I was doing."

"When I go off in the morning I say I'm leaving for school, not for work."
Frank Deakin

Becker, he said, has been an invaluable source of information and ideas for the newer staff members at the school. "All the teachers here have been influenced by him," he said. "We help each other, discuss problems and lessons to be avoided. Teachers are noted for 'permanently borrowing' the successes of other teachers. They help you to develop a style of teaching - the people here are great to brainstorm with."

Teachers are also personal friends. When Deakin's father died last spring, everyone at the school was there to help, he said.

It's been almost 20 years since Deakin first walked to the front of the classroom. There have been many changes.

"What you read about on the front pages of the newspaper is what we see everyday in class," he noted. "The break-up of the family, the climbing divorce rate, is the biggest change. It's not unusual now to have a child whose last name is not the same as his parents. There are a lot of difficulties in having a single parent family - a lot of stress, as if raising a child isn't tough enough. I think the changes in family have had the biggest impact on education."

The increased number of parents with high school and college education has increased. Now a teacher is questioned every step he takes. "Everyone has real deep feelings about education," Deakin explained. "It's the one profession everyone is familiar with. It makes it kind of difficult for us."

More parental participation in education is great, he said. But there are continuing controversies that never dig into the depths of education, only dealing with peripheral issues such as prayers in the classroom, and saluting the flag.

Two-parent families have changed too, he said, with both parents working outside the home. Latchkey children are found among these families, as well as single-parent families.

Other changes include the reduction in the size of most families. "Twenty years ago, a boy in my class would have three or four other brothers or sisters. Now it's a big family if they have one or two others at home," Deakin said.

Drugs and alcohol abuse are problems not confined to Cohasset, he added. And students are not limited to the advantages they have with more money.

"But this town is not provincial," Deakin said. "And I think we begin work on our problems sooner than other communities. Cohasset becomes involved in issues long before other towns. I can't see my peers in other towns video-taping a discussion at the elementary school about sexual abuse, but that's what this school system did two years ago at the Osgood School."

Recalling his first days as a teacher, Deakin said new teachers are worthy because of the fresh ideas and enthusiasm they bring to their profession. The older teachers bring experience and maturity to their careers and students.

"I think my major weakness," Deakin stated, "is that since I've been five, all I've ever done is go to school. One of the nicer things about people deciding to go into teaching later in life, is the diversity of experiences they bring to the classroom. That's where I'm lacking - in the area of real experiences of life."

His view of life may have been limited by the walls of a classroom, but his students surely consider themselves fortunate to be a part of that scenery.

Red Sox broadcaster has lunch with President

Once the president departed the luncheon for more official business, Vice President Bush sat down and talked baseball with the experts. "He was a very good baseball player at Yale," Coleman explained, "and he summers in Maine. So he has always listened to our broadcasts."

A third visitor to their table was cabinet member and presidential aide Donald Regan. "He's also a great Sox fan. He's originally from Cambridge and graduated from Harvard," the announcer stated.

"Needless to say," he continued, "we had a very nice time. It was quite a thrill.

"I think Clemens in particular, enjoyed the meeting. We tend to forget despite the notoriety he's received this year, he's only 23 years old. This was a big thrill for him. And thing was, he was pitching that night. Ordinarily, pitchers who are scheduled that night don't do much of anything that day. But he didn't want to pass up this opportunity. He told Mac (team manager John McNamara) before the game he was emotionally drained. But he worked six innings and won the game that night,"

For Coleman, who has witnessed the Sox' rises and declines through many seasons, "this was a big thrill" to meet the president. "I said on my broadcast that night it was a big thrill for all of us. He's involved in so many heavy issues every day - yet he wanted to take the time to talk with the Red Sox - to get into the toy department for a while and talk to grown men who play games for a living," Coleman said.

Ordinarily, visitors to the White House are not allowed to bring cameras or tape recorders into the building. But for whatever reason, perhaps because this was this second meeting, the Red Sox crew were allowed access with all their camera equipment and recording supplies.

Coleman, always ready for the 'big' interview, got his chance. While the president sat down and recited a few baseball stories, Coleman busily recorded every word.

"He told us a couple of baseball stories," Coleman remembered, "I had a copy of my book on being a sportscaster and I told him to brush up on it. It wasn't like a regular interview. I just taped everything he said and then cut it down to a few minutes. I aired the first half that night before the game. The second half I'll play this week (prior to Tuesday night's twi-night doubleheader)."

It was, Coleman admitted, a once-in-a-lifetime occasion. "And he's not only the president. He's very charismatic - Bush and Regan, too. I had seen Regan last year walking very businesslike down the hall of the White House. But he was quite charming to us last week," he noted.

"Frankly," the Rustic Drive resident stated, "I wasn't that nervous. Jack Rogers' wife said she was nervous, she thought she'd fall over. But maybe because I had my tape recorder with me, and I knew he knew sports. It didn't make it difficult for me."

The president, an avid sports fan and a great conversationlist, delighted his audience with his brief tales. "He talked about playing a baseball player in The Grover Cleveland Alexander Story with Doris Day. Then he said to me, can you imagine, 'is it okay with you if I tell another story?' I'm not about to tell the president he can't tell another story," Coleman said.

The broadcaster's wife, Ellen, recalled how gentle the president appeared. Describing President Reagan as a man of large stature, Mrs. Coleman was "amazed at how soft his hands were - especially for a man who likes to chop wood."

When the awestruck players got back to their hotel, they were filled with stories from the White House. "They were telling the other players all about their conversation with the president. They were all excited. Later, the Secret Service agents and their families came to the clubhouse to meet all the Sox. I think some people were very disappointed they didn't go," the announcer added.

It has been another season for Coleman when dreams have turned into reality. Although some predicted an early demise for the '86 Sox, they have proved them wrong.

Coleman himself, a longtime veteran of the Fenway Park broadcast booth, never assumed they would be out in front by the fall.

"Sometimes," he commented, "September rolls around and you can't wait for it to end. The season has been bad, and you're dying for September to rush by. But not this year."

It has been thus far, "a great season" for the Fenway gang. "Everyday is meaningful," he noted. "It's been just great. I never thought this team would do as well as they have. They're real competitors."

For Coleman, the 1986 season may not only bring a pennant home to Fenway. It's already included memories that come once in a very lucky lifetime.

☐ Understand the Curtis Compact in North Scituate is doing a record business lately, mainly Cohassetites who can't get into the Curtis downtown due to filming! Guess we all have to "suffer a little" to make all of the fun that the filming is bringing to our town worth it!

☐ Bill Duncombe of Cohasset will help lead this year's Colby College White Mule contingency. Duncombe is a midfielder who made the CBB All-Star team last year.

☐ Whoever said that Cohasset athletes are "big fish in a little pond," listen to this one . . . two of our former soccer stars from last year's graduating class are making it in the "big times." Remember Bill McKenna, our awesome goalie? Well, he is continuing right where he left off, he is Manhattenville's starting goalie. They played their first game last week, Bill started and played the whole game, and earned a shut-out for his efforts. A standing ovation goes out to you, Bill!

☐ Everybody knows how hard Bobby Shultz always works, and what a gifted athlete he is, right? Well you can bet that Bowdin College picked right up on that, and him, and he is on the soccer team. He is sure to be as super for them as he was for CHS! One interesting sidelight; his former coach, Jon Anderson (who you will remember left our town to coach Babson College), will get to see Bob this year, but as an opponent! That should prove to be a real challenge for both, and an exciting game to watch. Congratulations to you Bob, and best of luck as you start your college career.

☐ Our hearty congratulations go to Kevin and Elizabeth Drake this week, who became the parents of a baby boy, born August 24 at South Shore Hospital.

☐ Some good news for all of you art movie buffs, the Scituate Playhouse is running art movies now; they began last Friday night with a French movie, and promise to run more. A real plus for the South Shore residents who are art movie fans, be sure to watch the newspapers for listings, and have fun!

☐ Josie DiGirolamo was spotted at the football game on Saturday, looking grand! She's feeling ever so much better, and she was so happy to be able to see her son, Philip, at his first game as a senior (Phil did an outstanding job, as ususal).

☐ Richard and Mary Slowney are among those new parents busting their buttons with happiness. They became parents of a son on August 23, born at South Shore Hospital.

☐ Speaking of sons, Dave and Janet Lahive will be on the road for the football season . . . their son, Mark, made the Middlebury football varsity, and will do an admirable job without a doubt! Glad to see all of his hard work payed off, and we hope that your season is a super one!

☐ If you missed it, you have plenty to complain about; if you went, you know what a feast it was! The George H. Mealy Post's first annual clambake was a huge success, and everyone left full and content (and already making plans for the second annual clambake). Hats off to all of the workers that made the event so successful.

War on drugs

President and Mrs. Reagan made an emotional appeal to the nation Sunday night. They said our country is under seige by a terrorist within our ranks—drugs. And they enlisted our help to stop the killing.

The president said he would pump more money into new anti-drug programs, demand harsher sentences for convicted drug dealers. But all the money in the world can not stop the spread of deadly drugs unless we make the choice never to use them.

He is right. Unless we decide to stop the abuse of drugs in our homes, there will continue to be pushers on our streets and poison in our schoolyards and offices.

It's impossible to say why drug abuse has become so rampant. Is this generation, more than any other, prone to drug use? Why do we lean on the false promise and support of drugs to sustain us through the pressures and tensions of everyday living?

Surely other generations had their booze, their opium, and their marijuana. This generation has it all—from downers and uppers to grass, cocaine and crack. While little Johnny and Janie play around with grass in the boys and girls rooms of the local schools, Mom is at home with her bottle and Dad snorts coke at night. This scenario may seem false to some, but it is reality to others.

No wonder our children are getting hooked on crack. Mom and Dad are too busy with their own lives, into their own drugs to wonder what kind of mess the children are making of their lives.

Anti-drug education begins in the home. And it can't begin early enough. When little Johnny comes home from the first grade and inquires what "grass" is, talk to him about it. Don't wait—if he is curious with questions now, the time may come when he must satisfy his curiosity in a more realistic manner.

Be honest and be informed. Find out about the effects of marijuana, cocaine, and crack. Share the information with your children in a meaningful, serious way. Let them know you care enough to discuss this matter with them.

What if we designated one day in the year when the entire community had to sit down together to discuss drug use? One day, when parents are obliged to confront their children in a meaningful dialogue. One day, when parents and children do one thing—talk.

Parents could sit down, some for the first time, with their children. Together, they could share their knowledge of drugs and what the effects of these drugs have on users and abusers.

On this designated day, parents will explain why the first thing they do each night after work is to fix "a stiff drink." Children will admit how accessible drugs are in the schools, downtown or at shopping malls.

Parents will tell their children how much they love and respect them. Don't allow drugs to destroy that bond.

Communication is not the cure. But it is a valuable tool, maybe our only weapon against the spread of deadly drug abuse in our town. Talk to your kids. Let them know you care, that you're on their side. It's our fight too. They are not alone.

Roadrace classic set for Sunday

The South Shore Striders are gearing up for the second annual Late Summer Classic road race.

If the weather holds up, hundreds of hardy souls (and soles) will traverse the hills and dales of Cohasset, Sunday at 2 p.m.

The Striders, an association of runners living between Quincy and Plymouth, moved their Late Summer Classic race to Cohasset last year from Weymouth.

"It started as a mid-summer race," said strider Buzz Hollander. "We tried to run a road race for all abilities and because it was an evening race, it got to be quite a bit to handle."

Hollander said the group tried to run "everything from a one-mile race to a ten-mile race at Weymouth" before deciding to move the race to both Cohasset and the month of September.

"This way, we wouldn't have the heat problem and the multiple events," he explained. "It's proved to be very successful."

So far, about 125 runners have pre-registered with the South Shore Striders for the race.

Participants will have a choice of running the long 8.1 mile course, which will leave from Town Hall, down Jerusalem Road to Atlantic Avenue, to Border Street, to Gannett Street, to South Main Street, ending back at Town Hall.

For less intrepid racers, the 3.4 mile short course will follow the beginning of the long route down Jerusalem Road to Atlantic Avenue, but then back to Town Hall.

"The two races will go off at the same time," Hollander said. "Runners will have to decide which race they'll run when they fill out the application."

He explained, otherwise keeping track and trying to give out awards would be chaos.

"It could get confusing if somebody runs the short race and was registered for the long race."

Hollander said the Late Summer Classic is a good race for runners, because many this time of year are in training for marathons and they look for longer courses.

"The 8.1 mile course is long and challenging, because they'll be running along the hills of Jerusalem Road and the beach."

He also noted the scenic beauty of the race course.

"A lot of people enjoy running along by the water" he said. "If you talk to the real serious runner, he'll say, 'I never even saw the course; I was concentrating so hard on my effort.'

"But if you talk to the majority of the runners," he added, "they enjoy the scenic run."

The South Shore Striders have run races in association with the South Shore Hospital, and to raise scholarship money for high school track athletes.

"But this is a just-for-fun road race," Hollander said. The six-dollar entry fee will help pay for the use of Town Hall, refreshments, police details and portable facilities.

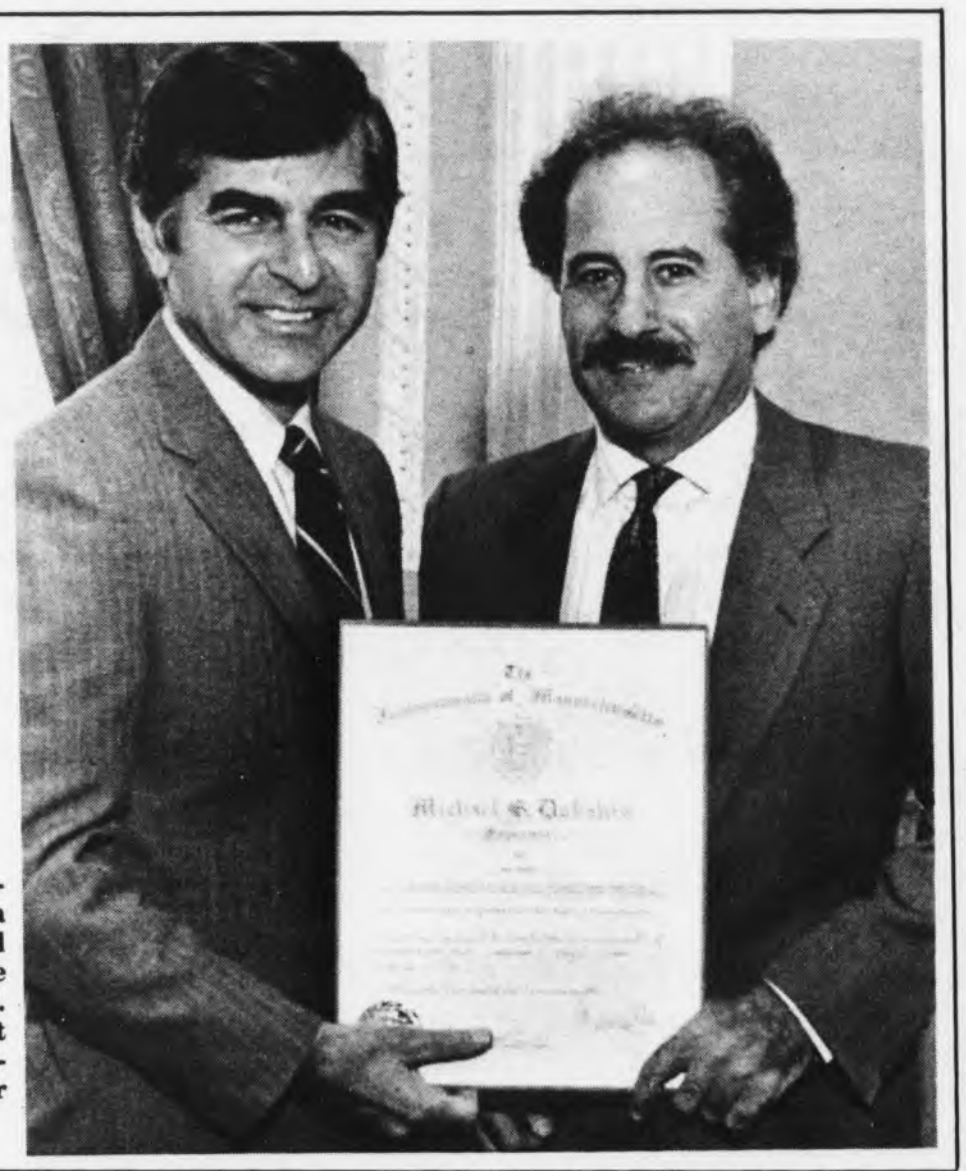
Because the striders are not offering prize money, Hollander said he doesn't expect any "big name" runners.

"But you never know who will show up at the last minute..." he said.

"I'm sure there will be a lot of the local better men and women runners," he added. "And people can get out there even though they're not 'world class.' In fact, that's why we try to run a short race and a longer race."

He explained, "We're looking to promote the step from the jogger who goes out on Saturday mornings to a more serious runner, somebody who would come out and actually get involved with a little competition.

Finally, Hollander praised town officials for their cooperation in helping to get the second annual Late Summer Classic off and running.



Cohasset resident Wade Frederici (R) recently received a citation from Gov. Michael Dukakis for helping in the fight against drunk driving. Frederici, owner of the Great Escape Restaurant, participated in the Alcohol Server Awareness Conference.

Vo-Tech year off to good start

South Shore Vocational Technical High School, the oldest operating regional vocational school in the state, began its 25th school year last week.

The school, serving the communities of Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hanson, Norwell, Rockland, Scituate and Whitman, has an enrollment of around 540 students this year.

"Everything went very smoothly for the first week of school," said Leonard Cody, director of guidance services for the school.

"There were very few glitches in the schedules," said Cody. "We didn't have anything like two classes scheduled for the same room at the same time.

"We only had a few freshmen get lost in the school, so the orientation program must have been effective," he said.

Cody said approximately 140 freshmen attended the orientation program on Sept. 3.

"The students may not be familiar with how the school operates when they come here from the schools in their communities," said Cody, "and we try to give them a chance to see how things work before all the upperclassmen come in."

Superintendent Clifford Easton welcomed the freshmen to the school, and the guidance department gave a presentation on guidance services.

The student council informed students of various activities at the school, and the athletic director and the coordinator of the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America spoke to the students about their programs.

Students broke up into their individual trade areas to see the shops and learn about the programs.

Mariner on the Street

Will the Red Sox win the pennant?

"Yes, they've already gone through their slump, and the law of averages says they should win. They usually slump at the end."

Dick Scott

"Oh, I certainly like to think they will. But my husband just went to New York to see the game and he was disappointed."

Leslie Sullivan

"Definitely! I think they have it together this year — pitching combined with hitting."

Robert Driscoll

"I think they're going to win the A.L. And they'll go all the way if they don't crack under the pressure like they have before."

John Linsley

"Oh, of course they are. This is going to be another one of our years."

Helen Pratt

"Definitely! I'm not a real baseball fan; I follow the Celtics. But I think they'll win."

Brendan Saint John

"I think they will win. They have trouble under the pressure, but I think they'll make it."

Tiffany Romano

"You bet your boots they will. They're good — they're the Boston Red Sox!"

Official talks of balanced growth

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner Staff

Managing growth and change is a balancing act, Secretary Amy Anthony of the Executive Office of Communities and Development told some 150 local officials and citizens Saturday at the first annual conference of the South Shore Coalition.

"It is critically important while trying to manage and control growth, that we allow balanced growth," said Anthony.

Protecting the environment, providing infrastructure (roads and sewers), maintaining the quality of life must be integrated with the area's economic growth, she said.

And providing affordable housing complements that growth, she said.

But in order to accomplish that task, communities must develop a strategy to ensure that local boards are working together with a similar focus.

Building moratoria, initially proposed to curtail growth, often encourages a rash of development instead, she noted. "Growth is not necessarily curbed, and housing becomes less affordable."

Anthony said the state has to take a strong role in assisting communities by providing funds and other resources to manage growth.

As a result, the state now is placing a greater emphasis on planning.

For example, the Executive Office of Communities and Development recently asked for proposals from municipalities, school districts and regional school districts for management improvement programs.

Grant requests may not exceed $30,000 for one town or school district, or $50,000 if it is a joint application.

EOCD has also devised housing programs to encourage developers to build affordable housing. Langley Keyes, a professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a former special assistant to the secretary of EOCD, pointed out that the middle class is disappearing and the cost of housing is rapidly getting out of reach for public service employees, such as teachers, firefighters and police.

In an afternoon workshop, Keyes told members of area housing authorities and fair housing committees that they must broaden their agendas to include not only low income housing but affordable housing as well.

Janet Humphrey, a town planner for Hanover and Hanson, said the better use of existing housing stock could alleviate the pressure to secure affordable housing.

Providing good, accessory apartments and encouraging older residents to move also could free up housing space, she said.

"But it's not that easy," said Keyes.

"Every community has got to decide what is affordable housing," he said. "The real issues are how to put together a planning process, a coalition, (to bring about new housing). Don't spend two years defining what is affordability," he cautioned the group.

He said besides taking care of the public housing agenda — providing shelter for the elderly, the physically and mentally handicapped and the mentally ill — look for ways to provide affordable housing as well.

"This is an opportunity for piggybacking low income with moderate income needs," he said.

Back in the 1930s, when the federal government first became involved in housing, the emphasis was not just on low income housing, but housing for the middle income as well. Strategically, that affects a lot more than the low income groups.

"At the heart of getting low income housing is the political process," he advised. You need to know about planning and zoning, just to counter any arguments against new housing proposals, he said.

And, he advised, if there are environmental issues, address them early on with the conservation commission and others.

Don Borchelt, a housing planner for the 101-community Metropolitan Area Planning Council, told the group that the federal tax reform bill, with the elimination of certain tax shelters, will require new solutions to providing housing.

"It's up to you to find out a way to provide housing, once the real estate tax shelter is gone," he said.

He said housing authorities and fair housing committees are the key elements in providing housing, rather than private developers.

Clark Ziegler, a policy analyst for EOCD, said that Gov. Michael Dukakis has committed $700 million in state resources, through grants and financing programs, to provide housing. The large sum is partly in response to the cutback in federal funds, he said.

Under the home ownership opportunity program, there are low interest loans from the state, grants from the state, grants from the Mass. Housing Partnership and grants to provide extensions of water and sewer services.

The emphasis is on local action, Ziegler said. Increased density or zoning to reduce land costs, providing town-owned land for a development (to reduce housing costs) or drawing a non-profit entity such as a church into the project are ways to provide affordable housing, he said.

T. Todd Andersen said he erred in not going out and "beating the hustings" in order to win town meeting approval for multi-family housing.

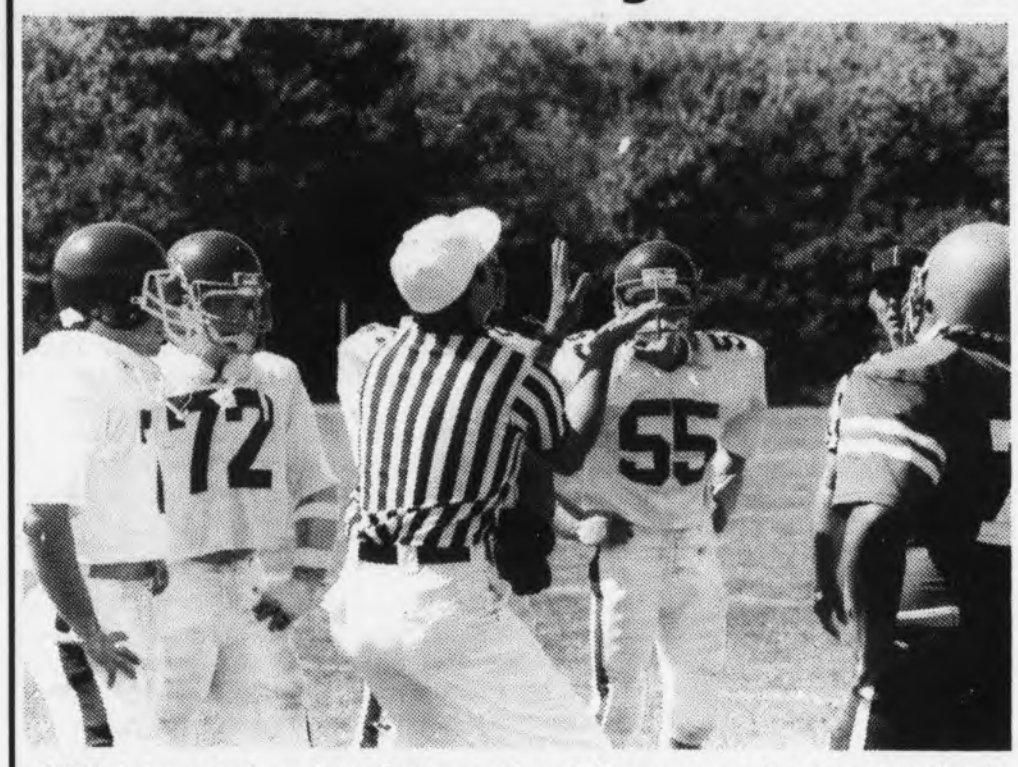
What a way to trounce Boston Tech !



CHS tri-captains Jeff Soltesz, Pat O'Connor and Liam Sanford, observe the game-opening coin toss.

No successful CHS football team can be without the able assistance of their cheerleaders.

Phil Mahoney scampers through the line on his travels to the end zone for Cohasset's first touchdown of the year.

CHS teams start season with mixed results

By Lisa Shumaker
Special to the Mariner

Saturday, the boys opened their season by crushing a weak Boston Tech team, 42-6. Coach Phil Pisano was very proud of his team and felt Cohasset's strength and quickness were the key factors to bringing about this overwhelming victory. Pisano was especially pleased with the fact that everybody on the team contributed to the win. Furthermore, a game like this enabled Pisano to give all his younger players some varsity experience, an opportunity which can only help the skippers in the long run.

Philip Mahoney in the first quarter scored off a 10-yard tackle play to give Cohasset a 7-0 lead. Then Bobby Durkin put on an incredible show scoring Cohasset's next 4 touchdowns. By the end of the game, Bobby was responsible for putting 28 points on the board, a feat which is especially impressive considering entire teams have trouble scoring this many points. Finally, in the fourth period, Bret Lincoln picked up his first varsity touchdown off an option play.

Pisano was very impressed with the way in which his offensive line played, and feels that if it keeps up the good work, Cohasset will be a major football force. Pisano also felt that Paul Froio, Mike Meers, and Sean Fitzsimmons all had good games as well.

This Saturday the boys travel to Norwell and play what should be an exciting game. Last year, Norwell and Cohasset battled it out all season to see who would come out on top in their division, and this year the rivalry does not seem to have died down at all. Hopefully, Cohasset will beat Norwell and prove that the Skippers are the dominating force in football on the South Shore.

Girl's soccer

The girls opened their season Tuesday with a loss to one of their toughest competitors, Duxbury. After making a couple of mistakes at the beginning of the game. Cohasset found itself down 4-0 by halftime. However, the girls came back strong in the second half and allowed only one goal. Coach Kennan Startzell was disappointed with the loss, but he was very impressed with his team's skillful passing game.

Startzell praised the efforts of this midfielders who consisted of Kristen Coutis, Susan Riley, and Kerry Kirkendall. Startzell also pointed out that if he had made a few changes in the lineup, and if Cohasset had made less crucial mistakes, the outcome of this game could have been entirely different.

With Cohasset's toughest opponent out of the way, the girls were free to cruise to a 3-0 victory over Hanover Friday. Once again, Startzell was happy with Cohasset's passing performance and felt that his team was in full control of the game.

Karin Anglin picked up the first goal off a long pass from backfielder Melissa Shea. Caitlin Staunton then blew by Hanover's entire defensive line and scored unassisted to give Cohasset its second goal. Finally, Caitlin scored once again after receiving a pass from Liz O'Leary.

Startzell also cited Katie Lord and Maureen O'Leary as having good games on defense. Startzell was especially impressed with Maureen's decision making throughout the game. Goalie Nancy Riley recorded the shutout for Cohasset.

Monday, the girls face a young but tough Norwell squad. Wednesday, Cohasset plays a talented Rockland team, and on Friday the Skippers travel to Whitman/Hanson.

Boys soccer

Tuesday, the boys began their season by losing to a tough division one team, Silver Lake, by a score of 2-1.

In the first half Cohasset played neck and neck with this talented squad, and the score remained 0-0 at the half. Silver Lake finally broke the ice in the second half and scored. However, Cohasset came back to tie the game after Todd Fitzpatrick rammed a penalty kick home. Unfortunately, with time running out, Silver Lake scored once again and put itself on top for good.

Coach Dan Magner was very pleased with his team's first showing and was especially impressed with the way in which Cohasset worked the ball around the field. If his team had the opportunity to play Silver Lake again, Magner was certain his team would have a much better chance of winning the second time around. Fullbacks, Jim Gallagher and Jim Reidy both had good games according to Magner.

Thursday, the boys bounced back from the loss and beat Abington, 2-0. Although Magner felt his team did not capitalize on several scoring opportunities, he was happy with the way in which Cohasset controlled the game, and he felt the victory was the result of an entire team effort.

Mariner sports

Todd Fitzpatrick scored both goals for Cohasset. The first goal came from a penalty shot which was set up by John Reidy. The second goal was assisted by Ned Chase.

Magner cited Ian Smart as having a great game, and Magner commended Ian on his hustle and intensity. Both John Reidy and Jim Reidy had good games defensively, and David Shultz was a strong force on offense.

Tuesday, the boys face Norwell and Thursday, Cohasset plays Sandwich, a team which is a potential rival for the small school division's championship.

Field hockey

Tuesday, the girls opened with one of the toughest teams in the league, Hanover. The Skippers accepted the challenge and pulled out an impressive 3-2 victory. In the opening moments of the game, Hanover came out quickly and scored before the dazed Cohasset team even had a chance to blink. However, the girls came back and answered Hanover's goal with 3 of their own goals. Hanover made a valiant effort and scored once again, but Cohasset hung on tough and came away victorious.

Cindy Spooner, Maureen Farren, and Maria Cahill all had great days on offense. Heather St. Onge, Sarah Dickerman and Jill Shockman all played well defensively.

Thursday, Cohasset blew past Middleboro. After a sluggish start, the girls led 1-0 at halftime. However, in the second half, Cohasset exploded offensively and scored 3 goals within 5 minutes. A stunned Middleboro team put in a good effort, but Cohasset's crushing attack proved to be too overwhelming.

Maureen Farren and Cindy Spooner did an impressive job in setting up Cohasset's many scoring opportunities. Maria Cahill played well on both ends of the field, and Sarah Dickerman turned in a solid effort on defense.

This week the girls face Abington on Monday, East Bridgewater on Wednesday, and Scituate on Friday. These three games must be won by the Skippers if they have any hopes of becoming league champions.

Team USA invited to Switzerland tournament

All local youth hockey players of Peewee and Bantam levels are invited to apply to play during the February vacation in Switzerland with "Team USA, Northeast."

Many players of each system enjoyed the "Team USA" trip to Germany and Italy last April. They made such an impression that Switzerland has offered free hotels to bring the team there Feb. 12 through 19. The exceptional offer reduces the 1986 costs of $1300 per player to $900 each. Parents and families are welcomed but not required.

In an effort to encourage more "B" and "C" players, the team director, Don Willy, explains that calibre of a boy's play is not nearly as important as his ability to act maturely and represent the U.S. appropriately. Plans call for three days of hockey, two days of touring, plus skiing and free time.

Willy says that many of the 1986 players earned their fares through fund-raising techniques. The same will be true for this trip. To date the team positions are already more than half-filled.

Asked if the political unrest of southern Europe last winter could create problems, Don explained that perhaps the world's two airlines, safest with respect to such problems would be the Soviet Aeroflot and Switzerland's Swissair. His team is flying via Swissair. He added further that the team is already scheduled to play in Austria in 1988, at Innsbruck, the site of Olympic skiing.

For more information contact: "Team U.S.A., N.E.", Don Willy, Porters Cove, Hingham, Home: 749-0906 or 0905, Recorder, 749-0900.

Recreation program schedule

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer three levels of instruction for dog obedience classes by Laurie Ann Cleveland.

All classes will be held on Cohasset Common, and will begin Thursday evening, September 18.

The beginner class will be at 6:30 p.m., Thursday's intermediates/advanced class will be held at 7:30 p.m. Please dress as weather dictates because classes are held outdoors.

The purpose of beginner classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered are proper use of voice corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on ownership and responsibility will also be included.

The obedience will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner, and to who eventually intend to show their pets in competition.

The intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the recreation department beginner class.

Owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck, and adding four inches. ABSOLUTELY NO SPIKE COLLARS ALLOWED!! It is suggested that the handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for this session.

For all classes: the fee is $17 per dog for the eight-week, one-hour per week program. Dogs should be a minimum of three months of age. There is no limit on maximum age.

To register call the recreation department office at 383-6791.

Dance Exercise Classes

The Cohasset Recreation Department will accept telephone registrations for Dance Exercise Classes by Karen Kirkendall.

Classes will be held Tuesday and Thursday from 5 p.m. - 6 p.m. at the town hall auditorium. The fee for the 12 lessons, will be $24 per person payable by check to the Town of Cohasset. Each person should bring an exercise mat. No children will be allowed.

To register, please call the recreation department office, at 383-6791. Classes are scheduled to start Tuesday, September 16, and Thursday, September 18.

Special museum tour Oct. 17

The Cohasset Historical Society and Cohasset Recreation Commission will be sponsoring a special Fall tour of the Society's two museum buildings on Elm Street at Cohasset Center.

The tour will take place at 11 a.m. Friday, October 17. All Cohasset and South Shore residents are invited to attend.

Featured on the tour will be the Maritime Museum, a latter-1700's ship chandlery containing artifacts relating to Cohasset's seafaring history as well as a general collection of historical materials dating from the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries. And the Captain John Wilson Historical House, an 1810 Seafarer's home now holding an extensive collection of 18th and 19th century furnishings, artwork, toys and home equipment from the early houses of Cohasset.

An unusual feature of the Capt. Wilson House is the kitchen with original fireplace located on the building's second floor. The Capt. Wilson House is perhaps the only primitive dwelling remaining in Cohasset, and its relatively unchanged appearance caused it to be used by both movie and television companies this recent summer.

The Historical Society and Recreation Commission tour of the Maritime Museum and Capt. House will last about one hour, and the Society's Senior Curator will be present to conduct the tour and to answer questions relating to museum exhibits. This will be one of the last opportunities for Cohasset and area residents to visit the Cohasset museums this year, as their summer open season ends on September 30. Both buildings will open specially for this October 17 tour. Each of the Cohasset Historical Society's museums offers a different and unique view of the history of a small New England seacoast town. To pre-register for the special Friday, October 17 museum tour please call the Cohasset Recreation Department office at 383-6791. A $1 donation will be requested at the time of the tour, for the benefit of the Historical Society.

The tour group will meet at the Maritime Museum, Elm Street, Cohasset Center.

The dinner, given by Notre Dame Academy Principal Sister Anne Monica Ruane, SND, and the school's Board of Trustees, is a thank you to parents and past parents who have actively participated in fund raising efforts.

Featured speaker for the evening will be Northeastern University President Kenneth Gilmore Ryder, who is a Hingham resident.

Nantucket basket classes

The Nantucket Lightship basket class will be given during November at Cohasset Hardware.

The class will be given by Bill Sevrens of Nantucket. The classes will be held Tuesday afternoons from 12-4 p.m. and Wednesday mornings from 9 a.m.-12 p.m.

The cost of the class is $150. Contact Tina Watson at Cohasset Hardware for further information, 383-0185.

Retirement planning course

Cohasset will sponsor a course in retirement planning for all town residents on three consecutive Wednesdays: Nov. 5, 12 and 19.

The course will focus first on the essential prerequisite of personal and family budgeting necessary for the accumulation of assets. "It's always amazed me that people who spend up to 80,000 hours in their lifetimes working can spend so little time planning their finances," stated Walter Row, course offeror.

Next, the class will explore tax savings and accumulation programs such as the IRA, Keogh, company pension plans and how the new tax law affects both, adding to and withdrawing from them.

This year's program also offers a special visit from the local social security officer who will conduct a presentation on social security benefits.

Row added that "putting it all together to enjoy the benefits of a large cash flow" is what the class is all about.

For more information, call Judy Volongis of the Cohasset Adult Education Program at 383-0088.

'Amy becomes big star, parents retire'

By Jane Tamburri Spitz
Special to the Mariner

The headline reads: "Amy Becomes Big Star, Parents Retire." It appears on the front page of The Boston Post, a simulated four-page newspaper printed with a boldface headline of the publisher's creation.

In this case the publisher was Eileen Meehan of Winter Street. She and her husband, Paul, wanted to present their daughter with a personalized souvenir of a memorable event: her professional acting debut on the big screen.

Nineteen year-old Amy Meehan was one of a few hundred South Shore area residents chosen from the 3,000 who applied for work as extras in "The Witches of Eastwick"—the Hollywood film featuring Jack Nicholson and Cher. The movie is based on a John Updike novel of the same name.

Since media coverage of the recent filming has not been scarce, most of us have heard quite a bit about 18-wheeler wardrobe trailers, amiable production people and numerous vehicles carrying equipment that stopped traffic and drew hoards of spectators to Norwell, Cohasset and Scituate.

Accounts of confused travelers having observed altered storefront signs and convinced they were lost in the coastal town of Eastwick have circulated along with the excitement of those who came in contact with someone associated with the film.

What we haven't heard much about are behind-the-scenes preparations, anecdotes about what these distinguished actors do when the camera stops rolling and just how an inexperienced extra projects realistic emotion without an acting lesson. These are the kinds of stories Amy shared during a conversation last week over a glass of orange soda.

Amy's first three days on the job were spent in a

Norwell girl becomes a 'Witches' star . . .

pew of Cohasset's First Parish Church.

"I was very impressed with the way the actors turned on their emotions over and over again as the camera films a scene many, many times. . . .

"One actress, Veronica Cartwright, is seated in the second row in front of the pulpit and she is supposed to go crazy in one scene. She stood up and yelled profanities that make up her one long line while the camera filmed her from different angles. She did the same line, which ends with the character's husband dragging her out of the church, over and over again from 9:30 a.m. in the morning until lunch break at 1 p.m., then again for another three hours. I thought she was just great."

Amy's second and third days at the church, running from 8:30 a.m. to 9 p.m., consisted of the repeated rehearsal and filming of a powerful scene in which Jack Nicholson's character suffers from intense physical pain.

Witches have supposedly produced a windstorm made evident from inside the church with the use of special effects. Blue sheets of plastic lined the church windows to accentuate an already blue sky. Tree branches that were supported by scaffolds outside the windows were blown against the glass by wind machines, Amy said.

"Jack enters the church in the middle of the sermon covered with leaves and with a mouthful of feathers. We were told that the keg-like container hidden behind a pew contained a mixture of cherry juice and Boston baked beans. They explained that the mixture would be forced through a tube that ran from the container up the back of Jack's coat and down his sleeve to the palm side of his wrist to make it look as though he were vomiting.

"What we weren't told was that Jack was going to "throw up" all over the extras in the front pew. Plus, the mixture had been stored in that container for months so that it really stunk. We didn't have to act sick or scared, we were. Jack looked really scary and even though he had to enter the church and vomit on the floor over and over again, he did it differently each time. He came on stronger and better and eventually he didn't even have to act, he became his character.

"At one point, he grabbed a man in a pew and shook him in a rage. During another take he shouted into a little girl's face, making her cry. Both of these extras were totally unprepared, so their reactions were real. Jack and the director apologized to the little girl afterward."

Amy, who managed to shoot four rolls of her own film betwen camera takes was surprised at the extent to which Nicholson became engulfed in his character.

"When the director would call out 'cut,' he had to repeat himself several times before Jack would stop. finally he would be yelling, 'Okay, Jack, you can stop now!' A couple of times a few crew members had to jump on Jack to stop him as he lay on the floor grunting, yelling and flipping out," Amy said.

Having heard about the call for extras Friday, only two days before applications were collected, Amy didn't have much time to prepare.

"On Saturday morning, my father took a full-length snapshot of me and brought it to be developed at a one-hour photo lab while I was at work at the Lobster Pot."

That photograph, together with Amy's senior portrait from South Shore VoTech school in Hanover taken last year, made up her portfolio. Dressed in blue pants, a striped jersey and sandles, Amy presented her application the following morning, a Sunday in July, to a director of the casting company at Cohasset's Deer Hill Elementary School.

The telephone call that came a week later announcing her temporary employment was a welcome surprise.

Later, when Amy was asked to work on the film for an additional three days in Marblehead, she was thrilled. "I've always loved movies and my dream since I was a kid was to be in a film."

At the Abbott Hall in Marblehead, Amy was among 200 extras who, with Nicholson, Cher and Michelle Pfieffer, made up an audience at a string quartet concert, in which Susan Sarandon plays the cello.

Here Amy was seated only a few feet from Nicholson, who between takes was determined to upset the quiet and calm demanded from the audience during filming.

"He made strange noises and shouted remarks like, 'You can't get a good witch these days' and 'I want the cellist.' The other principals would ignore Jack's comments intentionally, making him get into it even more," laughed Amy.

For a group of people who spent long hours awaiting that final take marking the completion of a scene, Nicholson's ability to interrupt the monotony was a welcome relief. "There is so much waiting around, that's something I hadn't realized."

It seems that the generally conceived image of Nicholson as an outspoken, somewhat raucous and slightly crazed personality isn't far from the truth.

"One day there were about 200 spectators across the street from Abbott Hall. Jack yelled out the window, 'there goes Jack Nicholson, he's going that way, get him!' and the spectators started running down the street in the direction he pointed, not realizing it was Jack at the window. We all laughed.

"Even though we had very little, if any, actual contact with Jack, he made us feel we were interacting." Amy managed to get an autograph on an enlargement of a photograph she had taken of Nicholson during the church scene.

"Jack saw me with my camera ready to take his picture and he raised his arms like a monster and roared so I could get a really good shot. It came out great."

Friends and family shared Amy's enthusiasm over this experience. "I walk into the bank and the teller says, 'how's the movie?' My mother told everyone about it," she said, blushing and turning her head to look to the side.

Amy abandoned her dream to become an actor after high school graduation. "I'd performed in elementary school plays and in junior high I was in "The Matchmaker" and "The Great All-American Disaster." I even liked working behind-the-scenes as stage manager or doing scenery or lighting. But by the time I turned 18, I thought I was being too unrealistic and I lost my confidence." Participating in "Witches" has renewed Amy's forgotten dream. "It was fascinating just to be there: I have enough news clippings about the film to fill a scrap book," she said.

Determined to continue acting Amy plans to become involved in local theatre and to introduce herself to other Boston casting companies. "I'm going to make a pain in the neck of myself and keep calling the casting companies. I'll do as much non-union work as I can and maybe someday it will be worthwhile to join the union.

September is here and the Village Fair is just around the corner! The Boutique Table workshops are well under way every Monday at 7:30 p.m. in Bates Hall, but we need more hands to help. If you cannot come to workshops, there are kits waiting to be taken home. Knitters, sewers, needlepointers, painters and woodworkers—we need you to donate a few hours to complete these kits and projects. If you are not "handy," you can help by donating 100 percent polyester fiberfill stuffing, old worn quilts, discarded bean bag chairs (we need the pellets), wood, and small print Christmas wrapping paper. Stop by to see what we're doing, stay if you want, or pick up a kit to take home. Hope to hear from you soon! Carol Sandblom 383-1812.

Fostering series

Boston Children's Service Association has started a new recruitment initiative designed to locate foster families for older children and teenagers.

The children and teens referred to BCSA, for a variety of reasons, are unable to live with their own families. Foster family care offers them the alternative of living with a family in their own or a nearby community until they are ready to return home.

BCSA serves children and families living in communities in the Greater Boston area, including the South Shore.

Training is an integral part of becoming an effective foster parent. BCSA offers extensive training which prepares new foster families for both the joys and stresses of parenting a child not born to them.

The fall training series begins on Wednesday, Sept. 24 at 7 p.m. All will be held at Boston Children's Service Association at 867 Boylston St., Boston.

Consultants study transportation improvements

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

Consultants are studying both the Old Colony Railroad rehabilitation project and widening Route 3 to three lanes as quickly as possible to "offer some relief to the long-suffering South Shore commuter," a transportation consultant told town officials this weekend.

Officials who attended a transportation update at the growth-management seminar held in Norwell High School Saturday also learned that the full range of commuting options, including private bus lines and commuter boats, will be examined as the rail and highway studies proceed.

Robert Joseph of the Edwards and Kelcey Organization of Boston said the Route 3 project will be studied comprehensively with emphasis on eliminating time-consuming construction snags.

When construction begins, the state Department of Public Works and engineers will avoid major land-takings as interchanges are improved to avoid controversy.

With a minimum of land taking, construction of a third lane from Weymouth to Duxbury — now estimated to cost $30 million — will begin in 1990 and would be completed in less than two years, Joseph said.

The road will be widened using state-owned land in the median strip. The consultant also said the median breakdown lane should be widened, new signs added and merging lanes lengthened.

Interchange work is being considered that will reduce "severe safety and congestion problems which are likely to develop in a very short time," Joseph said. Redesigned highway junctions could mean more entry and exit ramps, resulting in a majority of possible land takings.

Interchanges at Route 53 in Hanover and Route 139 in Pembroke are being examined by consultants in town-funded studies of those highways.

Though drainage does not present a safety hazard to motorists, Edwards and Kelcey will study ways to improve the highway's drains to minimize environmental impacts.

Highway drainage also has an impact on water quality in nearly every community along the road. Weymouth's Main Street Well is located within the Route 18 interchange cloverleaf. Other wells in Weymouth, Hingham, Norwell, Marshfield and Duxbury lie in the direction of water flow from the roadway. Surface and subsurface water supplies in Hanover, Norwell, Hingham and Weymouth are close to the highway.

The North Scituate railroad station on Gannett Road, as it appeared during the heyday of the Old Colony line in the early 1900's.

The Old Colony Railroad Citizens' Advisory Committee is expected to complete its preliminary report this month on which areas and topics will receive further scrutiny in the coming year.

The committee's report will be forwarded to state environmental affairs Secretary James Hoyte after a 30-day public-comment period this fall.

Hoyte will then determine which areas along all three rail lines will receive special attention in the second phase of the study, according to consultant Stephen Polechronis.

Polechronis reviewed the major alternatives under examination, including the possibility of "intermediate" stations at Brockton, South Hanson and West Hingham.

If full-length service is indicated by the study, the rail lines would end in Middleboro, Plymouth and Scituate near the North River.

Consultants have the impression that transfer service in Braintree — where commuters would leave Old Colony trains and ride buses or railcars to the Red Line station — may be inadvisable, since it would take more time than the same trip by automobile, he said.

"The intent is to pull cars off the expressway, and the negative time savings involved in a transfer service would be unattractive to many commuters," Polechronis said.

Two teachers talk about their philosophies. . .

staff here at Osgood is great," she added. "It's a real nice group of people to be around. The atmosphere here is friendly."

Other, more experienced teachers have helped their younger counterpart during her first days at the new school. One teacher has volunteered to help teach the children how to brush their teeth. "Every day after lunch she'll come in and brush her teeth along with the children. She has a friend ho's a dentist and she's going to bring along some teeth and a big brush. The kids will love this," Sammons said with a smile.

Kim Sammons

Her students are all the same age, but at different levels of learning ability. When she writes her daily lesson plan, she takes into account these varying levels. With the teacher's guidance, the four students "help each other," she said.

Teaching, according to Sammons, is similar to other careers. In other words,it has its highs and lows. "It can be rewarding, frustrating,,wonderful, depressing and stimulating, all at once. It's like any other job. Most of the time, it's wonderful. That's why I'll stay with it," she explained.

The profession of teaching is personally satisfying to this youngest member of the Osgood staff. "The majority of time, this career is gratifying. Otherwise, I would never stay. Special needs is personally very gratifying, whereas it may not be for another teacher.

"I feel great every time the kids learn anything. They're so happy to learn - almost anything is pleasing to them. They get excited about learning, and it really rubs off. It makes me feel good to know I'm a part of that feeling," she said.

Looking far into the future, Sammons said she anticipates she will obtain a Master's degree in education. She would like to be a college teacher in the field of special needs. "That's several years from now," she said, sitting behind her classroom desk.

For now, Sammons is content to commute each morning from her Braintree residence to Cohasset. She realizes her contributions could help a student "accomplish just about as much as he wants. They're just like anyone else," she explained. "If they are excited about learning, they will. If they don't like something, these kids will let you know!"

left on top. If you've smelled vinyl burning, you'll know what I mean. It's the worst smell."

The fire department arrived moments after it was notified of the situation. Although an ambulance accompanied the engines, Migliaccio refused treatment. "He was okay, and so was I," Leach said.

The elderly man, who must walk with the assistance of a cane, was eager to get back to his television viewing.

Leach explained that he sees Frank each day as he makes his delivery rounds. "He doesn't move around too well. He can't really get up when I come around, so I like to step into the porch and chat with him for a moment. I deliver his mail to him just about everyday on the porch and then I talk with him," he said.

Migliaccio's wife was not home at the time of the sofa fire, according to Leach. But once Frank was led to safety, the mailman took the cushion and extinguished the smoke with a bucket of water.

A firefighter later told Leach he was lucky because usually in an enclosed smoky fire, once a door is opened and air is released into the area, a blazing fire is ignited.

Leach, a Plymouth resident, has been a Cohasset postal worker for 13 years. He has been assigned to this particular route for the past two years.

"There are a lot of new people on my route," he said. "But I still get to see a lot of the older people on my route. I buy stamps for one woman who can't get out to the post office anymore. I like to stop for a while and chat with a lot of them. They're our patrons, and it's the best way I can show them that I respect them."

Coalition: Licensing authorities have broad discretion

By Judy Enright
Mariner Staff

Nearly 200 officials from area towns attended a day-long conference Saturday at Norwell High School sponsored by the South Shore Coalition and the Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC).

Jean H. Christensen, of Marshfield, executive director of the 10-town Coalition, said at the end of the day that she felt the conference was a definite success. "I'm pleased that so many people turned out, especially on a beautiful day like this."

Sessions were planned at the conference for a variety of town officials and issues that face those officials. Sessions were lively with questions coming fast and furious once panelists finished their presentations.

Atty. Robert Marzelli, who is Marshfield's town counsel, told a gathering on "Town Selectmen and Administrators: Licensing Authority and Muncipal Leadership as Growth Management Tools," that there are an enormous number of activities that are licensed at the local level. He commented that a statute or bylaw that allows an authority to license some activity, such as pool halls or massage parlors, doesn't entitle them to ban them all on principle.

One of the biggest tools a municipal authority has with a developer is delay. Delay is death to them.

— Robert Marzelli
Marshfield Town Counsel

"You have to take each application on an individual basis," he said. He commented that most of the functions that are licensed were once not favored socially or were thought to be physically dangerous.

The extent of a local board's discretion in issuing licenses, Marzelli said, varies according to the statute, but "discretion is always very broad."

He said he tells his clients that "you can do almost anything you want as long as you do it in a procedurally correct way. That's a broad statement I know but it's almost always true." Licensing authority's decisions, he said, could be reviewed in court by the aggrieved party but that the decision would be reviewed as a matter of law and not whether it was a good decision. The court, he said, usually does not second guess the licensing authority on whether or not it was a good decision but would determine whether the decision was legally correct based on the facts.

He added that a court could rule that a decision was arbitrary and capricious if there was absolutely no evidence to support the decision. "It's not very hard to get some evidence to support decisions," Marzelli said.

He said he was not aware of a case where anyone had a right to a license in the first instance. "So with the initital issuance of a license," he said, "you have tremendous discretion." The courts, he added, are beginning to look a little more closely at the kind of evidence an agency uses to support its decision. But, he said, when licenses are granted, the issuing authority is able to look at things that a planning board or board of appeals can't deal with, such as what kind of traffic does it create and are there other similar businesses in that area. "You can look at traffic in a broader way than some of the other boards," he said.

One of the biggest tools a municipal authority has with a developer, Marzelli said, is delay, "Delay is death to them," he said, and added that cities and towns can use delay as a tool to reach compromises on something that the board feels is important. "You can use delay as a bargaining tool," he said.

Marzelli advised the boards to insure that they give proper notice of the time, place and subject of a hearing on a project and allow the developer enough time to prepare a case and obtain legal counsel. He said there should be documentaion of the hearings so that if a court case should ensure there would be plentiful evidence that the town or city had acted correctly and had given the developer enough time and notice.

Atty. Donald L. Connors, from Choate, Hall and Stewart, told the gathering that it is not effective to deal with growth simply as a zoning matter. He said effective growth management in the latter part of this century will involve not only zoning but purchase of lands with public and private funds and "the use of an array of different strategies, such as the use of police powers to regulate what is done with land."

He added that every town in the South Shore Coalition, "has a growth management problem right now."

Massachusetts is one of the few states that does not mandate comprehensive growth management programs, he said. Some communities, he said, do have such plans, "but most of them are terrible. If they weren't terrible, we wouldn't be here today."

Connors cited his work with Nantucket which he said was "the case of a community aggresively deciding what they wanted for their future." Nantucket some years ago, he said, "was experiencing such extraordinary growth," that they felt they were losing control of the future." He added that his hometown of Duxbury created a board, made up of members from numerous other boards, to formulate a growth pattern for the town. He said the board met for several years.

Nantucket, he said, set up a similar board and decided that their objective was balanced growth. He said Nantucket wrote a short, easy to read and understand, comprehensive plan that mirrored the wishes of its inhabitants. Zoning regulations are continuously reviewed and updated and a land bank get a percentage of all properties bought and sold. The money is used by the municipality to buy land

Every town in the South Shore Coalition has a growth management problem right now.

— Atty. Donald L. Connors
Choate, Hall and Stewart

deemed critical for protection of the island. He said a private charitable foundation also buys lands that are viewed as critical to Nantucket.

Duxbury, Connors said, developed a land use study committee in the early 1970's that was geared to protect resources that are important and keep development back from the roadway. "The sense of Duxbury is different," he said, "than if we had continued with the cookie cutter type of gridiron development that was popular in the Fifties."

Connors said towns need to formulate an ongoing process where community leaders are given some responsibility for shaping the community's future.

Connors added that Duxbury has achieved success not simply through zoning but through a combination of zoning, land acquistion, conservation restrictions, private charitable foundation funds and, he said, "the town has spent a lot of money."

Judi Barrett, from Duxbury, outlined how her board successfully turned down a proposal for a continued care facility for the elderly with 360 units on 195 acres of strategic land. She said the proposal was good from some standpoints. It would disturb little of the site and would leave most of the property as open space. "It looked terrific as a development opportunity," Barrett said, until the boards recognized its possible effect on downstream water supplies. "We questioned whether to allow the development at the risk of five downstream well sites that would be affected by 57,000 gallons of waste water a day. "It was a well-planned development, but not here."

As discussions continued, Barrett said, it became obvious to the developer that he was going to have to build a treatment system to protect the town's wells. The town was then faced with an alternative proposal for 81 single family homes and household hazardous waste then became an issue.

"The only alternative we had after a series of negotiations," she said, was to buy the land." Purchase at $3.4 million had great fiscal ramifications but the committee, Barrett said, "Had to run the risk that the people would respond to the environmental issue and vote to override Proposition 2 1/2." They did, she said, overwhelmingly.

Connors commented, "it wasn't zoning that did that. It was people who got involved and got mobilized."

Atty. Joel B. Bard, acting executive director of MAPC, added, "this is a good illustration of what you can do even when it's too late. It's never too late.

Remedial & special needs program successful

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Two summer programs at South Shore Regional Vocational Technical High School were very successful, administrators told the regional school committee last week.

The new programs, a remedial academic program at the Hanover campus and a special needs vocational program at the Abington campus, were approved by the school committee in July.

"The remedial course gave us the ability to better serve our students," said VoTech guidance counselor John Kosko, "either to help students make up courses or to help incoming freshmen with deficiencies."

Kosko, who directed the remedial program, said 23 VoTech students made up courses failed during the school year, and 20 students were incoming freshmen, some of whom were invited to the sessions by the school and some who voluntarily took the courses.

"The program made the freshmen more comfortable with the school this fall," said Kosko. "They already knew the building and knew some of the staff."

The program featured remedial courses in English and math.

The vocational program, directed by VoTech guidance counselor Pam Titus, included 93 students from Quincy to Cape Cod and as far west as Stoughton.

"The students in this program had to exhibit a barrier to employment," said Titus. "The course was designed for special needs students.

"This was the first time many of these students were ever in a shop doing a work-related activity," Titus said. "I had comments from parents who said their children never would have gotten the opportunity to work in a shop if it wasn't for this program."

The students worked in a variety of areas including woodworking, food preparation, painting and wall decorating, landscaping and cosmetology.

Also over the summer, three VoTech students attended a workshop run by the Governor's Alliance Against Drugs on Thompson Island.

The students, senior Thomas Tierney and junior Matt Pabano of Hanover, and junior Andrea Mulligan attended the workshop.

The students all belong to VoTech's Peer Leadership Program, which helps students cope with peer pressure, and the problems of drug and alcohol abuse.

"We're not psychologists," Tierney told the school committee, "but we're trying to come up with things that will help us help each other."

The peer group has run educational programs about drugs and alcohol for students, and especially hopes to help freshmen deal with pressure from upperclassmen this year.

In other business, the school committee denied a grievance brought by English teacher Robert Parkis.

Parkis said that school Superintendent Clifford Easton placed a letter of censure in his personnel file because of action the teacher took against a student.

According to Parkis, a student in his sophomore English class last May refused to redo an illegible assignment. Parkis asked him several times to do the paper again, and each time the student refused. Parkis then threw the illegible assignment into a wastebasket.

"A 16-year-old student who refuses to do his work or write legibly needs to be awakened," said Parkis. "I've only done something like this once in 17 years of teaching. This kid needed a jolt."

Trask Tackle is haven for fishing, hunting enthusiasts

In just a year, the small tackle shop along busy Route 3A established itself as a prominent site in Cohasset.

The Trask Tackle Shop became a favorite spot for local fishermen and hunting enthusiasts. Owner Mark Trask soon found the small corner store, located across the parking lot from the Jack Conway office, was insufficient to accomodate their needs.

. Trask Tackle moved just last week to new, more spacious headquarters in North Scituate. The fishing and hunting supply store is now lcoated at 767 Country Way, across the street from Wilder Brothers.

"We now have two times the space we had in Cohasset, Trask said. "With more space, we can have an even greater selection of items. We also are able to provide better services to our customers."

One of those new services include rod and reel repairs, he explained. "Basically," Trask stated, " we provide a complete selection of rods, reels, lures, live and and frozen bait for both fresh and salt water fishing."

The sport of fishing, he noted, is seasonal. Fresh water fishing is best in the spring with salt water fishing in the summer and fresh water again in the fall.

Trask Tackle began as a home business for the Cohasset firefighter about two years ago. That business expanded to the Route 3A location in March, 1985.

"Our intent here in North Scituate," he said, "is to provide an even greater selection of goodsand services to the South Shore fisherman."

In addition to the rod and reel repair, Trask Trackle also provides an official state scale for weighing fish. It also provides state licensing for fishing and hunting.

Spider Gilbert of Brockton radio station WBET has called Trask Tackle, "the best little tackle shop I've ever seen."

"I think our new location is much better, for us and our customers," Trask said. "In addition to our expanded services and products, we're easy to locate. From Route 3A, take the turn into North Scituate. Take the left at the North Scituate center lights, and you're there."

A large, hand-painted sign with the hooked fish marks the Country Way store. Trask Tackle is open seven days a week.

Prior to their relocation, the tackle shop sponsored its first Bigfish Bluefish tournament. More than 100 entries were made throughout the four-week contest. The overall winner, Ted Abbadessa of Hull won $100 worth of goods and services from Trask Tackle Shop.

"The tournament was even more successful than we anticipated," Trask said. "We had people from throughout the state enter the contest. We had one entry from Berlin, Mass.

"Next month, we plan to sponsor a Coho tournament on the North River," he said. Details about that contest will be forthcomining.

The results of the first annual Trask Tackle Bigfish Bluefish Tournament are as follows:

Theatre Review

A lukewarm reception to 'Spider's Web'

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

In this scene from Agatha Christie's chilling mystery, "Spider's Web," (left to right) John Davin as Sir Rowland Delahaye, Cheri Condon as Pippa Hailsham-Brown and Elizabeth Dickinson as Clarissa Hailsham-Brown ponder who among them is a murderer in the Nickerson Theatre's production

September is really the beginning of the new year, whether the calendar proclaims it so or not. It heralds the start of school and "normal" routines as well as the start of the new theater season.

This September, the year-round Nickerson Theatre in Norwell starts its third season with 12,600 subscribers, surpassing last year's enrollment by 300. As with any subscription series, theater-goers expect some outstanding surprises and some lukewarm productions. Certainly, last year Nickerson subscribers were given a fair share of fine productions.

Unfortunately, the opening show for this season, Agatha Christie's "Spider's Web," falls into the lukewarm category.

It starts off promisingly enough, bedecked with Jace Holms' antique-filled country home set and a pair of proper British gents played by John Davin and Niels Miller.

Sir Rowland Delahaye (Davin) and Hugo Birch (Miller) have challenged each other to identify which glass contains the prized port wine. Unless one of the snifters has been laced with poison (one of Christie's favorite devices), there is little in the opening scene to suggest impending menace.

The truth is, there is little in the entire play to suggest menace. Talk about dead bodies, mysterious interlopers and secret drawers and doors do little to hold the audience in suspense.

Instead, "Spider's Web" seeks to combine mystery with comedy. Flighty, imaginative Clarissa Hailsham-Brown (Elizabeth Dickinson) is bored living in the country, married to a proper gentleman from the foreign office.

To liven up her days, she plays a "What if. . ." game, trying to imagine what she would do if she entered the library one afternoon and found a dead body on the floor.

Because she is known for her fantasies and joking ways, she is not taken seriously by her friends. That leads poor Clarissa to proclaim more than once, "Nobody believes me when I'm telling the truth." The foreshadowing is obvious and heavy-handed.

Under Nora Hussey's direction, the Nickerson production of "Spider's Web" is less of a tongue-in-cheek mystery with comedic manners, and more of an out-and-out British farce.

Dickinson's Clarissa is played so broadly that one has trouble discerning between the character's honest moments and those she contrives. The actress spends much of her time posing, as if a photographer were about to take a publicity shot any moment.

Equally overblown is the bumbling, almost manic Inspector Lord, who comes to the house after receiving an anonymous phone call about a corpse. Christoper Childs is rarely pointed in what is supposed to be a well-controlled verbal duelling between the inspector and the lady of the house. The interrogation scene borders on pure, broad slapstick.

The appearance of a dead body on stage comes as no surprise to anyone in the audience. How it got there is not terribly intriguing either. Act I spends a lot of time setting up the situation. We're introduced to the obligatory precocious child, Pippa Hailsham-Brown, ably played by Quincy resident Cheri Condon. We learn quickly that Clarissa is Pippa's stepmother and that her real mother was the cause of deep emotional trauma for the girl. Robert Riley, a regular actor with the Nickerson Theatre, is Jeremy Warrender, a friend of the two proper gentlemen and a man with an affection for Clarissa. He humors her and plays along with her games.

Act II presents red herrings, those characters we'd love to suspect of mischief. Ed Peed is duly unctuous as Elgin, the butler. (Did the butler do it? Possibly.) Ingrid Soninichsen, the gardener Mildred Peake, is a bit eccentric too.

Who actually caused the dead body to appear becomes less important than trying to hide the body. Clarissa mustn't have a mess on her floor when her husband returns home with an important foreign dignitary.

"Spider's Web" is not a mystery-thriller, certainly. It's not even a clever weaving of character and plot. Because the mood of the play at Nickerson is confused — are we dealing with a spoof of British conventions, a broad farce or a real whodunit? — it's impact is thoroughly remarkable.

"Spider's Web" continues at Norwell's Nickerson Theatre through Oct. 11. It will be followed by "Billy Bishop Goes To War" on Oct. 17.

The Nickerson Theatre is located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell. Although the season is heavily subscribed, seats are still available for each show.

Area foster homes needed

Boston Children's Service Association is pleased to announce the start of a new recruitment initiative designed to locate foster families for older children and teenagers in homes on the South Shore.

The childen and teens referred to BCSA, are for a variety of reasons, unable to live with their own families. Foster family care offers them the alternative of living with a family in their own or a nearby community until they are ready to return home.

In some situations a child may be in foster care for a very short time and for others it is more long term.

BCSA is seeking families who not only enjoy working with children but who have an interest in being part of a treatment team and making an impact in their own community.

Training is an integral part of becoming an effective foster parent.

The Fall Training Series begins on Wednesday, Sept. 24 at 7 p.m. All will be held at Boston Children's Service Association at 867 Boylston Street, Boston.

For more information, call BCSA at 267-3700.

ANGLER'S CORNER

Great fall fishing along the North River with Capt. Coho

By Bill Smith
Special to the Mariner

Given the opportunity to fish any local water during September, it would be difficult for me to pass up the opportunity to fish the mouth of the North River.

This estuary is a well-known haven for huge striped bass in the 30 to 50 pound range and giant bluefish often tipping the scales at over 20 pounds.

Lately, anglers from throughout the East have discovered a new and exciting game fish, the Coho Salmon. This West Coast transplant delights anglers with challenging runs and aerial acrobatics.

In the last Angler's Corner, the characteristics of this fish and the history of the Massachusetts Coho Salmon Program were examined.

This week, fishing tactics, the hows and wheres, will be explored. Much of this information has been collected through discussions and fishing outings with Captain Jim Smith whose expertise in Coho fishing has earned him his well-deserved nickname of "Captain Coho."

"There is no doubt about it, salmon have become a major game fish providing action for anglers from late August into the winter months," Captain Smith said.

"In the past, Coho were often incidentaly caught by anglers fishing for bass or bluefish who could not even identify their catch.

However, with the recent media focus on the Salmon Program, many anglers are experiencing the addiction of this sport.

One look at an angry 12 pounder crashing a small lure and frantically leaping to escape its hook is all it takes. The fishing is getting better and so are the fishermen.

What I mean is that fishermen are learning to use correct tactics and equipment. Downriggers are catching on and anglers are experimenting with new lures and colors that have proven successful in other parts of the country. There's still a lot more that we can learn, particularly in the area of bait trolling and drifting."

Salmon begin to return to the North River in August often stacking up off the mouth of the river where they actively feed. Anglers must first locate areas which will hold fish. At the mouth, these include deep holes where the bottom changes. Bottom humps and rock piles are also good holding areas for the Coho. The best fishing in this area occurs on the outgoing tides when the bait is being pushed from the river.

During August and September, this area can be fished in a variety of ways. Drifting mackerel strips of four to six inches on a lightweight rig can be deadly. Trolling a dodger with a fly or squid on a downrigger takes many Coho.

Good color combinations are a green dodger with a black and white fly, a red dodger with a black fly and a chrome dodger with a silver fly. The dodger should be set no further than four feet off the downrigger ball. Fish this rig very slowly. Trolling spoons can be run in combination with this rig.

Last year, Captain Jim found the Mann's Deep Pig, particularly the chartreuse colored plug, to be very effective. The number 25 Hot Shot works well in this area. Colors change with light conditions. Another good trolling lure is Luhr Jensen's J-Plug which can be effective even when run at moderate speeds.

When trolling at the mouth of the river, vary the depth of your plugs. One lure should always be trolled immediately in the boat's wash. Begin by trolling at a moderate speed, passing lures over likely holding spots, and then repeat your trolling pattern at a slower speed.

Most anglers prefer a light action eight to nine foot graphite rod with a conventional reel loaded with 10 to 14 pound test line while fishing this area. This outfit allows for better control of lures and can really muscle a big fish when needed. This longer, flexible rod will absorb the quick strike of a large Coho without breaking off. On more than one occasion, fishermen have hooked and landed trophy striped bass and bluefish on this tackle.

Once Coho begin to move up into the river, usually by the middle of September, the angling focus shifts from the mouth of the river to deeper holes around Damon's Point. Trolling the same lures on shorter lines at slow speed works best. Smaller Hot Shots and Heddon Tadpolys, particularly fluorescent orange, work well. Casting from the shore with multi-colored wobbling spoons will also take Coho when fished close to the bottom.

There is some limited trolling from Damon's Point upstream to Riverside Circle in Norwell. However, fishing tends to be better above Riverside Circle to Bridge Street. Troll #30 and #35 Hot Shots near the banks. Tadpolys and Shad Mann lures also produce. This section of the river can also be fished from the shore. Anglers will find that a side planner worked in the current with a Hot Shot can be very effective. Captain Smith took a number of Cohos last season while trolling this area in his guide canoe.

"The key to success in this stretch is to keep the plug on the nose of the salmon as they hold in the deeper pockets," he suggests. "Aggravate them enough and they will often strike out with anger."

Some fish are often caught near the Marshfield Conservation area. This spot can be trolled as well as worked by casting lures against the banks. From the conservation area to Adams Tackle, fish tend to push through rapidly. Trolling this stretch of river may produce an occasional fish.

The hole off of Robinson Creek just after Adams often holds fish. Coho will often run up this creek at higher water. Anchor your boat and cast wobbling spoons across the mouth. Little Cleos, Dazzlers and Alpena Diamond spoons in chartreuse or flash colors work best. This area and above is best worked from canoe and the shore, when access is available. Other areas in the upper stretches which produce fish include the mouth of Third Herring Brook in Hanover, holes just below Old Washington Street Bridge and Pembroke's Herring Brook.

Late season angling can be found in the Indian Head River. Shore access to this area is easy and many fish are caught in this area each year. The same spoons are effective but in smaller sizes. The area of the river from the West Elm Street Bridge to the dam is closed to all fishing to protect the breeding stock which is collected in the holding pools at the dam.

Bill Smith is the owner of Adams Tackle on Route 139 in Pembroke. For up to date Coho reports, call the fishing hotline at 826-8342. Captain Jim "Coho" Smith is available for Coho Charters from September through December. Call the shop at 888-6372.

Muffins, 'Butter tastes better in batter' & variations

Yankees pride themselves on being thrifty — nothing is wasted. Shirley Odell even adds leftover vegetables to a plastic bag in her freezer for use later in soups or stews. She uses margarine in casseroles and such to save money, but when it comes to muffins, "butter tastes better in batter," is her creed. Here is her basic recipe for hot muffins, with ways to vary them.

MUFFINS AND VARIATIONS

2 c. flour
1 T. baking powder
3/4 tsp. salt
1/2 c. sugar
1 egg, lightly beaten
1 c. milk
3 T. melted butter

Combine dry ingredients. Combine last three ingredients and pour into flour mixture. Stir just enough to moisten dry ingredients, but do not beat. Fill greased muffin tins 2/3 full. Bake at 400 for 20 to 25 minutes. To vary: add 1/2 c. crisp bacon, or 1/2 c. cooked sausage to dry ingredients. Add 1 c. blueberries, or 1 c. chopped apples and 1 to 2 extra T. flour to dry mixture for Fruit Muffins. Add 1 c. grated cheese to dry mixture for Cheese Muffins.

Last week's column mentioning Grandma's weekly ordeal with the family wash jogged a few memories in the senior citizens set. Connie Stevens told fondly of her grandparents' pantry — unheated and frosty in the winter, shelves lined with jars of homemade jams and preserves to see them through until spring. Pies, freshly baked in the big, well-polished black range, would be cooling in the pantry, with one set aside for them to take home. It's a way of life foreign to today's youngsters. I treasure a bespattered little book dated 1888 called "Tested Recipes Compiled By the Ladies of East Marshfield." Even the ads reflect a different lifestyle. B.A. Atkinson & Co. at the corner of Common and Washington Streets in Boston advertised parlor sets from $35 to $500; chamber sets from $10 to $750; ranges from $14 up; parlor stoves from $3.50 and over 10 acres of all kinds of furnishings. E.W. Hall in East Marshfield (now the Hills), was having a "clearing sale," of boots, hoisery (their spelling), corsets, ladies and gents underwear and horse blankets. This is Mrs. C.L. Damon's recipe for

POTATO SOUP

Take 10 small potatoes, boil and mash. To a quart of milk add one quarter pound of butter; pepper and salt to taste. Boil, then thicken with a tablespoonful of flour, flavor with celery; watch carefully that it does not get too thick. . .Frugal, but almost as good as vichyssoise, a soup regarded by some as rather epicurean, but in reality was unknown in France when it was first served in New York in 1910. Nowadays when tourists think they are sampling French fare by ordering this soup, they find that it is only on the menu in restaurants that cater to Americans and then usually served with leeks added to the potatoes.

A Burpee seed catalog printed in 1888 had 128 pages, only one of which was devoted to tomatoes. Today, we can them, prepare sauces, pickle them and transform them into delectable relishes. To some, picking a sun-warmed fresh tomato out of their own garden, is ample award for every minute devoted to tending this most widely used vegetable. A true tomato lover even finds ways to eat them at breakfast, for with scrambled eggs or omelets, a slice of tomato adds color to the plate. Here is the way the Ladies of East Marshfield used them in a receipt in their little book.

BAKED TOMATOES

Take a baking dish and put first a layer of tomatoes, a layer of onions sliced thin, a layer of bread crumbs, butter, pepper and salt; then another layer of tomatoes, onions and so on till the dish is filled. Bake 1 1/2 hours. B.R. NOTE: I suppose there was no way to set the old-fashioned range at 325 degrees, but it might be well for those of us who try out this receipt to use a moderate oven and check after 30 minutes.

* * *

I can't resist sharing with you this recipe in the little book from a Mrs. W.L. Sprague.

BIRD'S NEST PUDDING

Pare 10 apples, take out the cores and fill apples with sugar and nutmeg. Make a custard of 5 eggs to a quart of milk, sweeten to taste, pour over apples and bake 1/2 hour. NOTE: If you have any of "grandma's" recipes, we'd love to hear from you.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Entertaining your family isn't always entertaining

"It was fun getting together with your family," I told the Dragon. I'm glad John decided to have a party to celebrate Helen's 60th birthday."

"You shouldn't say what age she is,"the Dragon responded, "because age is so relative. In ancient times a woman of sixty was considered very, very old. Today a woman of that age is really only 39 or so."

"It's kind of you to say that," I said, "because getting together with everyone really brought back memories of the cookouts we used to have years ago. Helen and Ellie and Dunna and Anne and Mary and I were all young mothers with little kids all over the place. Now the kids have kids. But except for arthritis, ulcers and a bad memory I don't feel a bit older. Has everyone changed but me?"

"Don't worry," he consoled me. "In many ways you haven't grown up a bit. And you never did have a good memory. But you've probably forgotten that.

" However," he continued, "if it will help you recapture your lost youth, we can have a cookout and invite everybody. How about next weekend?"

" My memory isn't that bad," I told him. "You had a cookout last week that I haven't forgotten. You invited all the kids and their families and friends and talked them into cleaning out the basement. You invited a friend with a truck and conned him into hauling everything to the landfill. You snookered me into doing the shopping and the cooking. The kids cleaned; Al Lopes hauled; I cooked. And you ate and rested. Afterward, everybody but you cleaned up and put things away. How's that for total recall for someone with a bad memory."

He looked hurt. "Who carried out the hot dog rolls?"

"If memory doesn't fail,"I replied, " Kim did."

He nodded. "I let her. Because exercise is good for pregnant women. But I removed all the little plastic jobbies that hold the bags shut. And I unscrewed the mustard jar."

" Not exactly a Catered Affair," I observed.

"Well," he responded, "I still think it's a good idea to have family cookouts. If you make your children's home life pleasant they're less likely to leave you all alone in your old age. It keeps them close to you."

"That and letting the air out of their tires," I agreed.

"I didn't think you'd noticed that. And anyway, if we have an extended family cookout you won't have to do all the work. I promise."

"You mean you'd do some?" I asked.

"I didn't think you'd noticed that. And anyway, if we have an extended family cookout you won't have to do all the work. I promise."

"You mean you'd do some?" I asked.

" Not exactly. But I'm sure Helen and Ellie and Dunna and Anne and Mary would be happy to help. And if John and Chip and Joe and Tom and Paul are there, it should be a snap to get all the plastic jobbies removed and the jars unscrewed.

"And what I have in mind will be a real class act. I mean, now that you're on hand-shaking terms with the Prince of Wales, you could invite him and Princess Di and the kids. Maybe even the Queen Mum if running Buckingham Palace doesn't keep her too busy."

"Right," I said. And since Prince Charles took the trouble to tell Holly Safford her pasta was 'great,' may be a taste he aquired from his mother's cooking. We could ask Her Royal Highness to bring a pasta salad. There's just one problem."

"Tell me what it is," the Dragon said. "I'll cope."

"Well," I responded, "I don't think there's another royal visit scheduled in the immediate future. And winter weather being what it is here in the northeast, you could have a problem unscrewing mustard jars and untwisting plastic jobbies if you're wearing mittens."
